Letter from L. Cook to Mr. M. Taylor, dated 28 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on when the Office for National Statistics will publish its joint letter with the National Audit Office concerning the accounting treatment of Network rail. (74769)

The Office for National Statistics made its joint statement with the National Audit Office concerning the accounting treatment of Network Rail on Thursday the 24 October. I am enclosing a copy of this statement, and shall also be placing a copy in the House of Commons Library. The statement is also available on the National Statistics website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/pdfdir/networkl002.pdf and on the National Audit Office website at: http://www.nao.gov.uk/pn/01–02/nao—ons.htm.

Pensions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to hold an investigation into the erroneous figures on the value of United Kingdom pension contributions which have been published by the Office for National Statistics over the last four years; and if he will make a statement. [77001]

Ruth Kelly: The answer requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Laws, dated 28 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on pension contribution statistics [77001].

I commissioned a Review of ONS Pension Contribution Statistics on the 2 July of this year. The Terms of Reference of this Review were set out in a Press Notice (copy attached).

The review panel included senior statisticians from ONS, Inland Revenue, Department of Work and Pensions and the Government Actuaries Department, supported by experts from the Association of British Insurers and from the University sector.

The panel produced a report which I published on 10th October. (I attach a copy of the Press Notice that accompanied the publication of the review).

I am currently drawing up an implementation plan, based on the review recommendations, and I expect to announce the details of that before the end of November. I will steer that programme of work drawing on the same sorts of expertise that contributed to the review.

Pensions (Tax Relief)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the marginal rate of tax at which all contributors' pension contributions could be allowed if (a) all contributions were to be allowed at a single rate and (b) the cost were the same as that of the present system of tax reliefs. [76787]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the cost of reliefs under the current system are given in table 7.9 of Inland Revenue Statistics. The latest version is on the Inland Revenue website; http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.Uk/stats/pensions/p t09 l.htm

They are subject to a wide margin of error and are not indicative of the effects of changing the system, as there would be significant changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Population Estimates

Ian Lucas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of local authorities in England and Wales ranked by the difference between the Office of National Statistics mid-2000 Population Estimates and the 2001 census (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a percentage. [76619]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. Ian Lucas, dated 28 October 2002:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer asking for a list of local authorities in England and Wales ranked by the difference between the Office for National Statistics mid-2000 Population Estimates and the 2001 Census (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a percentage. (76619)

The attached tables supply the information you have requested. I will be placing copies in the House of Commons Library. The current estimates for the years 1982–2000 are based on the 1981 Census figures, rolled forward, and will be shortly revised to take account of the results of the 2001 Census and an assessment of the cumulative errors that have built up in the mid-year estimates. Final revised Mid Year Estimates for 1991–2000 will be released on 13 February and for 1982–1990 at a later date.

In order to assist users in interpreting changes over time, ONS have issued a set of interim revised national estimates for the period 1982–2000. At the national level, for example, the previous mid-year estimate for population of England and Wales for 2000, of 52,943 thousand has now been accordingly revised to 51,913 thousand.

Red Diesel

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the rates of duty in each EU member state in respect of red diesel. [77542]

John Healey: "Red diesel" is gas oil which has been marked with a red dye and a tracer chemical making it eligible for a rebated rate of excise duty. The effective duty rate in the UK is currently 3.13 pence per litre. This rebate is specific to the UK. While many other EU member states operate rebate schemes that are similar to the UK's, they are applied in very different ways so no direct comparison is possible.

Split Capital Trusts

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the actions taken by the Financial Services Authority to address investor concerns about the fall in value of the Split Capital Trust market in the UK over the last two years. [77494]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority issued a discussion paper on the split capital investment trust market in December 2001. The results of this discussion paper were published in May 2002. Since then the FSA have been investigating past problems, including possible problems with marketing literature, possible mis-selling and alleged collusive behaviour by some managers of split capital trusts. Looking forward, they have been considering if any changes are needed to the rules of their regulatory handbook or the listing rules. They have also been liaising with the Association of Investment Trusts on their proposals for improved disclosure of the portfolios and borrowings of split capital trusts.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) oral and (b) written communications took place between the Financial Services Authority in the UK and the Guernsey Financial Services Commission between 1st December 2000 and 30th April 2002 on the subject of the (i) risk characteristics and (ii) disclosure and regulation relating to Split Capital Trusts; and if he will make a statement. [77495]

Ruth Kelly: In the course of its duties the FSA liaises regularly with other financial regulators about issues of mutual interest. The details of these discussions is a matter for the FSA itself.

Tax Self-Assessment

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to ensure that the on-line tax self-assessment service complies with the requirements of the Welsh Language Board. [76744]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no facility at present to enable self-assessment tax returns to be filed on-line in Welsh. The Inland Revenue's aim is to have an on-line filing service available in Welsh and is currently working towards this end.

The Welsh Language Board are aware of the situation, have accepted the current position and accepted the Inland Revenue's plan to make this service available.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the on-line tax self-assessment material is not available in Welsh; and what proportion of this is available in Welsh in another form. [76747]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no on-line tax self-assessment material available in Welsh. 100 per cent. of tax self assessment material is available in Welsh in paper format or electronically via the Welsh language pages on the Inland Revenue's website. The electronic material can be downloaded, printed and completed manually by individuals.

VAT Inspections

Brian Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many complaints his Department has received in each of the last five years relating to VAT inspection. [76831]

John Healey: Where available, relevant statistics in relation to their complaints procedures will be published in HM Customs and Excise's Annual report, which is due for publication later this Autumn.

Working Tax Credit

Vera Baird: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of (a) families with children and (b) lone parents who will be eligible for working tax credit and will have relevant incomes as defined under section 7 of the Tax Credits Act 2002 of less than £5,060 a year for the purpose of calculating entitlement. [77268]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of families with children expected to benefit from the working tax credit and to have relevant incomes as defined under section 7 of the Tax Credits Act 2002 of less than £5,060 for the purpose of calculating their tax credit entitlement is estimated to be 350,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Violent Crime

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many violent crimes were recorded in Cambridgeshire in each of the last three years. [74783]

Mr. Denham: Violent crime is comprised of offences of violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery. The requested figures are given in the table.

Violent crime in Cambridgeshire

Year ending March	Number of recorded violent crimes
1999–2000	7,056
2001–02	8,584

It should be noted that recorded violent crime is not necessarily an accurate guide to trends in violent crime, as it is subject to changes in reporting and recording. For example, in the British Crime Survey, for England and Wales as a whole, the number of common assaults showed a statistically significant decrease of 24 per cent. between 1999 and interviews during 2001–02, whereas common assaults recorded by the police in England and Wales increased by 15 per cent. over the same period.

Air Weapons

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on the acquisition and possession of air weapons. [75309]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The Government are very well aware of, and take very seriously, the damage which can result from the misuse of air weapons. We are looking at a number of options for dealing with the problem of air weapon misuse including a change in the age limits at which air weapons may be acquired and possessed. We will bring forward proposals shortly on measures to tackle this problem.

Alcohol (Young People)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the powers of the police to confiscate drink in the possession of young people. [75347]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The police have powers to confiscate alcohol from under-age drinkers in public places (Confiscation of Alcohol (Young Persons) Act 1997). Section 29 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 further clarified the confiscation powers. This enables the police to deal with situations where young people's drinking is causing a nuisance to others or may lead to bad behaviour. We have taken careful note of representations from the police to increase the confiscation powers to include sealed containers, and we intend to bring forward amendments to do this when parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 September 2002, Official Report, columns 74–75W, when he will introduce legislation to amend the regulation issued under section 13 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 in respect of the confiscation of alcohol from under-age drinkers in public places. [76527]

Mr. Denham: The regulations made under section 13 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 are The Local Authorities (Alcohol Consumption in Designated Public Places) Regulations 2001. These set out the procedures to be followed by local authorities, relating to consultation and publicity, before making an order identifying a public place for the purposes of restricting anti-social public drinking. The regulations do not cover police powers to confiscate alcohol, and we have no plans to change them.

We are considering representations from the police and others about existing police powers to confiscate alcohol and we will introduce any changes in the law that may be necessary as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what evidence he has collated on the effectiveness of (a) anti-social behaviour orders and (b) acceptable behaviour contracts; [76258]

(2) what measures the Government are using to encourage greater use of anti-social behaviour orders and acceptable behaviour contracts in Wales. [76259]

Mr. Denham: A major Home Office review of all aspects of the use of anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) was published in April 2002. The review found that ASBOs were being used successfully to reduce many different types of anti-social behaviour, although there were some areas in which the orders were not being applied for. In response to these findings we brought forward a wide range of enhancements to the law relating to ASBOs in the Police Reform Act.

We have also commissioned a survey of Acceptable Behaviour Contract (ABC) schemes in England and Wales, and is also evaluating the original ABC scheme in Islington. This research will be published in spring 2003.

The Home Office is producing new, joint guidance on anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) and acceptable behaviour contracts (ABCs). The new guidance will include examples of good practice and reflect the changes to anti-social behaviour orders introduced by the Police Reform Act 2002. It will encourage greater use of ASBOs and ABCs by helping all those involved in protecting the community to implement the measures more effectively.

Asylum and Immigration Policies

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to offer language and citizenship education to those settling in the UK. [75327]

Beverley Hughes: The advisory group, chaired by Professor Sir Bernard Crick, will be making recommendations on language and citizenship education for people seeking naturalisation. The advisory group is working on a programme of study, which will be part of English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) language teaching for those assessed as not having sufficient English. The Group has had two meetings so far and intends issuing an interim report early in the New Year, with a final report around Easter 2003.

The Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill refers to applicants having to deomonstrate "sufficient English (or Welsh or Scottish Gaelic)".

The Group is presently interpreting 'sufficient English' as meaning enough linguistic ability to sustain unskilled employment in an English-speaking environment. For those with that minimal level already, they consider that attendance at classes should raise their level of competence to the next entry level, as defined in the existing adult learning language skills criteria. In other words, the Group is considering the concept of attendance and progression, rather than requiring all applicants to reach an absolute standard that for some might never be achievable.

The Group has considered whether there might be some sort of screening process to filter out those people who already have sufficient English. While we do not want to make unnecessary work for people who already have a good command of one of the UK languages, we do want them to demonstrate their knowledge of life in the UK. Screening might also be used to allocate people to programmes which best meet their needs. ESOL teachers are well used to assessing linguistic capability to get people on to the right course and a number of such tools already exist.

Defining these borderlines more precisely will of course take a little time. Issues of numbers and resources, as well as standards, will also need to be considered. And, as I have said already, those with good English already may not be required to attend all the classes and may study privately for the citizenship element of the programme. This will require some innovative thought about delivery methods, bearing in mind that the overall objective is to facilitate integration and not just to test knowledge.

For those people for whom any course of study would be too challenging, perhaps by virtue of their age or infirmity, or because they have learning difficulties, the Bill includes a provision to waive these requirements. So, people who can provide sound reasons for not demonstrating progress or achievement will not be debarred from acquiring British citizenship.

The Group is currently considering a "Living in the United Kingdom" programme under six broad heads. These are:

Information on everyday needs—for instance, types of housing, paying bills, and schooling;

Knowing the law—for instance, the rights and responsibilities of a citizen;

Sources of help and information—including both national and local voluntary and community bodies;

Employment—for instance, understanding how to get a job, and employment rights and responsibilities;

Britain as a changing and multi-cultural society—including the four historical nations, the new ethnic and religious groups and changing patterns in family life and relationships;

British national institutions—political, economic and social.

The level would obviously be basic, and dependent on someone's needs at a particular point in their immigration history. But the Group is involved in ongoing discussions as to whether a more in-depth programme on the last two items would not be sensible for those with good English already.

I understand that, because some migrants do not become eligible for free education immediately, the Group intends recommending that the kind of information contained in the "Living in Britain" programme should be made available, perhaps at the point at which entry clearance is granted, to people such as work permit holders or spouses who have an avenue to indefinite leave to remain. For this purpose, the members will be proposing that the Government produces a 'Living in Britain' booklet to be given out at ports of entry or at posts abroad. Such a booklet could be translated into a number of languages to help those who, as yet, have not acquired language skills but who could, nevertheless, benefit from what it contains in their path to becoming active, involved citizens.

The Group intends to make an interim report early in the new year for public discussion and hopes to make a final report around Easter. The group will shortly be embarking on a widespread programme of consultation.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of asylum claims received a decision within two months in the last six months. [75314]

Beverley Hughes: The latest available information relates to October 2001 to March 2002, for which 68 per cent. of new substantive asylum applications made in that period were decided and served within two months.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will list the countries from which the Government will not as a matter of course accept asylum applications. [75332]

Beverley Hughes: There is no list of countries from which the United Kingdom will not accept asylum applications.

There are provisions in the Nationality Immigration and Asylum Bill to introduce a list of countries from which the starting presumption is that asylum claims will be clearly unfounded. However, there will continue to be individual consideration of those claims.

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of each country from which a visa is required applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications in 2001; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before the visas expired; and how many applied (i) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (ii) for political asylum. [76148]

Beverley Hughes: The available information is given in the attached table. The information on grants of settlement includes persons who entered the United Kingdom with an entry clearance leading to settlement; and the data on asylum seekers includes those applicants who had not previously applied for entry clearance.

Entry clearance data for 2001 by nationality is not yet available. Data for 2000 was published in the Command Paper Control of Immigration Statistics United Kingdom 2000 Cm 5315, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Information is not available on the number of persons who return to their country of nationality before the leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom expires. Information is not available on the number of holders of visas for temporary purposes who subsequently apply for asylum or for settlement.

Asylum Seekers

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were arrested in 2002. [75649]

Beverley Hughes: Information is not collected centrally on the nationality of the immigration status of persons arrested.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been directed to (a) Hampshire, (b) Portsmouth and (c) Southampton; and if he will make a statement. [76507]

Beverley Hughes: As at the end of June 2002, 690[1] asylum seekers (including dependants) were being supported in National Asylum Support Service (NASS) accommodation in Hampshire, of which 250[1] were being supported in Portsmouth and 440[1] in Southampton.

Statistics on the number of asylum seekers supported by NASS in each region are available on the Home Office's Immigration and Asylum Statistics website http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

[1] Figures have been rounded to the nearest five.

Note:

Figures exclude cases where the asylum seeker support has been ceased.

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those who sought asylum in the United Kingdom in 2001 (a) entered the country on valid travel documents and claimed asylum immediately, (b) entered the country on valid travel documents and claimed asylum after any permission to stay expired and (c) entered the country illegally. [76626]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested is not available. In 2001, 65 per cent. of applications for asylum were made in-country and 35 per cent. were made at port.

The 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees recognised that people trying to escape persecution often relied upon the use of false documents and unusual means of travel. Article 31 of the Convention provides that refugees should not have any penalties imposed upon them as a consequence of entering the country of refuge illegally in order to seek sanctuary, provided that they travel to that country directly from their own country, present themselves to the domestic authorities without delay and show good cause for their illegal entry or presence.

Information on asylum applications is published quarterly. The next publication will be available from 29 November 2002 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are being supported by the national asylum support service; and of these how many have dependent children. [76916]

Beverley Hughes: [holding answer 24 October 2002]: As at the end of June 2002, the national asylum support service (NASS) was supporting 59,660[1] asylum seekers (excluding dependants) of which 10,650[1] had at least one dependant.

The number of asylum seekers supported by NASS who have children among their dependants is not available.

Statistics on the number of asylum seekers supported by NASS are available on the Home Office's Immigration and Asylum Statistics website: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

[1] Figures have been rounded to the nearest five.

Figures exclude cases where the asylum seeker's support has been ceased.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the asylum seekers who are supported by the national asylum support service made in-country applications for asylum. [76917]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The information requested is not available.

The only available statistics are on the percentage of asylum applications which were made in-country. In 2001, 65 per cent of asylum applications were made in-country.

Asylum Seekers (Lichfield)

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Department has to open a camp for asylum seekers in Lichfield District. [77560]

Beverley Hughes: Site searching has continued, as we said it would when we announced our shortlist for Accommodation Centre sites on 14 May. However, we will not be putting into the public domain details of such sites unless and until they are considered to be a serious prospect for the siting of an accommodation centre.

Charity Commission

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charities were removed from the list of those registered by the Charity Commission in the last year for which information is available. [75341]

Beverley Hughes: This is a matter for the Charity Commission, as the Government Department that registers charities in England and Wales. The Chief Charity Commissioner will write to the hon. Member, and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Chelmsford Prison

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cells there are in Chelmsford Prison; how many are (a) single occupancy cells and (b) two person occupancy cells; how many prisoners are currently occupying single cells on their own; and how many are sharing a single cell with (i) one and (ii) two or more persons; [75569]

(2) what the maximum number of places for prisoners in Chelmsford Prison is; how many prisoners there are in Chelmsford Prison; and if he will make a statement. [75568]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 22 October 2002]: The operational capacity of Chelmsford prison is 576. The number of prisoners held there on 18 October 2002 was 576.

There are 430 cells at Chelmsford prison of which 419 are certified single cells, 10 are double cells and one is a triple cell. 285 of the certified single cells have single occupancy and the remaining 134 are doubled. There are currently no cells at Chelmsford which hold three prisoners.

Child Prostitution

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with (a) his European counterparts and (b) senior police officers regarding tackling child prostitution; what proposals were examined; and if he will make a statement. [75113]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Discussions with European colleagues about the problem of child prostitution have been largely in the context of negotiations over a Draft European Union Council Framework Decision on combating the sexual exploitation of children and child pornography. This will require member states to criminalise particular aspects of the sexual exploitation of children aged up to 18, including those involved in prostitution. The UK fully supports this framework decision as a significant step to increase protection for children throughout Europe. We hope it will be agreed shortly.

Strengthening our laws to meet the requirements of the framework decision will form part of our plans to reform the framework of laws dealing with sexual offences on which we will be publishing a paper later this autumn. This follows on from "Setting the Boundaries", the report of the Review of Sex Offences published in July 2000, which made a number of recommendations to strengthen the law, including providing better legal safeguards against those who seek to exploit children in prostitution.

We also issued in May 2000 guidance to the police and other agencies on "Safeguarding Children Involved in Prostitution", which highlighted the importance of children involved in prostitution being treated primarily as abused children. This followed discussions with representatives from the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the other agencies concerned.

Moreover, we have been supporting under the Crime Reduction Programme a number of local projects aimed at evaluating best practice in dealing with prostitution, including how best to help young people leave behind their involvement in prostitution. All these projects are supported or led by the police and involve local agencies working together to find practical solutions. The aim is to identify the most effective strategies so that these can be disseminated.

Child Protection (Internet)

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what measures he has taken and plans to take to alert parents to the dangers of paedophiles using the internet to target children. [75335]

Hilary Benn: The Government set up a Task Force on Child Protection on the internet in spring 2001.

A public awareness campaign was launched by the Home Office in December 2001, following discussion in the Task Force, to alert children of 14–16 and parents of younger children to the dangers presented by paedophiles using the internet, to deliver key safety messages, and to advise them of sources of information and support. The campaign used advertisements in national newspapers and magazines, radio, cinemas, satellite TV, and online. The key points were to make clear that someone a child meets on the internet may not be who they seem, and that children should not give out personal information online. This was well received and evaluation showed that it was successful in raising awareness of the key messages. We are now considering further activity to be carried out later this year.

Children in Custody

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to improve the protection of children held in prison custody. [75346]

Hilary Benn: Improvements in the protection of children held in prison custody are being taken forward by the development of child protection policy and practice, involving co-operation between the Prison Service, the Youth Justice Board and social services, as well as a range of community-based charities.

Considerable progress has already been made. Through the revision of the child protection protocol and the policy set out in the relevant Prison Service order, the relationship between young offender institutions holding juveniles and their local Area Child Protection Committees (ACPC) have been greatly improved with most governors now having representation on the local ACPC.

Each YOI in the juvenile estate has appointed a child protection co-ordinator (and deputy) and has established a child protection committee within the establishment, with some having representation on that committee from the local ACPC, police and other relevant agencies.

A child protection training programme has been developed for all staff within the juvenile estate.

Community Policing (Wales)

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to encourage use of community police support officers in Wales. [76256]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to the development of Community Support Officers (CSOs) throughout England and Wales. On 23 September my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, announced a fund of £19million for the recruitment of more than 1,000 CSOs in England and Wales this financial year. 27 forces bid successfully for a share of this funding.

Gwent is among the forces which will benefit from this funding. They bid successfully for £169,029 to recruit 30 CSOs. Gwent is also one of the six forces which were selected to pilot, over the next two years, detention powers for CSOs.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the backlog of hon. Members' correspondence at the IND is; what the target date is which he has set to clear the backlog at the IND; what discussions he has had with posts overseas concerning the processing of applicants for citizenship by British Overseas Citizens; how many persons are awaiting decisions on citizenship applications; and how many passports were lost by IND in 2002. [76098]

Beverley Hughes: The total number of outstanding cases in the backlog of MPs correspondence at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) as of 30 September was 1,808, of which 361 await ministerial reply and 1,447 official reply. We aim to reduce the backlog to frictional levels by the end of this year and are on course to do so.

The Department published figures in June 2002 relating to the voluntary acquisition of British citizenship. In 2001 IND received 109,005 citizenship applications and made decisions on 90,295 applications. There are no available figures relating to the current number of applications awaiting a decision. There have been no substantive discussions so far with our overseas diplomatic missions about the processing of applications from British Overseas citizens etc. We and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are preparing the guidance needed by posts and applicants before the amendment in the Nationality and Immigration Asylum (NIA) Bill comes into force.

With regard to the last part of the question, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate issue letters to members of the public where a passport cannot be immediately traced. As at 11 October 2002 a total of 265 such letters had been issued.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 3 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Baez Azez Baez. [76235]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 22 October 2002.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 18 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. John Alosine Bangura. [76239]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 24 October 2002.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 5 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. Vida Obiri (Yeboah-Burgess). [76236]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 21 October 2002.

Crime Detection Rates

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the crime detection rate and increase the numbers of criminals brought to justice. [75336]

Mr. Denham: The Police Standards Unit is currently working with a number of police forces to improve their crime detection rates. This will be achieved through a structured performance enhancement programme, utilising the good practice guide and supported through other existing initiatives. Force performance is measured through the performance information supplied to the Police Standards Unit on a monthly basis.

Through the further development and structured implementation of the National Intelligence Model (NIM), police activity can be targeted more effectively at both detecting and disrupting crime. This, coupled with the increased provision of analytical support, will provide the crime and disorder partnerships with the ability to detect crime and bring offenders to justice.

On 17 October this year, the Government published the "Narrowing the Justice Gap" framework document. This document sets out a three-pronged approach to increase the number of offenders brought to justice. The strategy involves:

overcoming weaknesses in the overall criminal justice process by encouraging good practice and inter-agency coordination at local levels; targeting particular types of offences;

targeting particular types of offender, in particular the persistent offender scheme due to commence in 2003.

The Government have made available £182 million over a four-year period to expand the national DNA database. The Home Office, ACPO and the Forensic Science Service are working together to maximise the benefits gained from the expenditure being made in the development and application of DNA and other forensic techniques.

Crime Prevention Partnerships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of crime prevention partnerships in reducing crime in the Portsmouth, South constituency; and if he will make a statement. [76790]

Mr. Denham: The Crime Reduction Director for the South East regards the performance of the City of Portsmouth's crime and disorder reduction partnership as good and Portsmouth recently won the award for the best crime and disorder strategy for 2002–05 in the South East region. According to the latest available figures, total crime in Portsmouth is falling faster than in similar partnerships across England and Wales.

The partnership actively seeks to engage the local community in reducing crime. For instance, following a police operation in the Portsmouth, South constituency, there will shortly be a public meeting to work out with the local community ways of ensuring long-term sustainable improvements to the quality of life for the residents of Somerstown.

Crime Reduction

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress with reducing (a) crime affecting older people and (b) the fear of crime among older people. [75313]

Mr. Wills: Crime against the elderly is horrifying, but is thankfully uncommon; levels fell by 20 per cent. between British Crime Survey (BCS) 1996 and BCS 2000, and older people are on average only a sixth as likely as the young to suffer a personal crime. We are making special efforts to reduce the chances still further, and in particular we have developed and implemented a strategy to clamp down on the despicable crime of distraction burglary. Levels of fear of crime among older people are still too high; we are committed to reducing them, and we are working with charities such as Help The Aged to find new and better ways of tackling fear of crime among seniors as well as crimes against them.

Death Forms

Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalties are incurred by erroneous completion of (a) death certificates and (b) cremation forms. [73417]

Hilary Benn: Under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953, the doctor who attended the deceased during his or her last illness is required to state the cause of death to the best of his or her knowledge or belief. The certifying doctor may not be able to be certain in all cases that the cause of death given is beyond question, and such deaths should be reported to the coroner. It would be an offence to refuse to issue a death certificate or to falsify a certificate. On conviction, such a person would be liable to a fine of up to £200.

Contravention of regulations under the Cremation Act 1902 is an offence. On conviction, a fine of up to £1,000 may be imposed. Anyone convicted of wilfully making false representations, or falsifying a certificate, with a view to securing a cremation is liable to imprisonment of up to two years.

Death certification procedures are being considered by the Review of Coroners Services and by the Shipman Inquiry which will be reporting next year.

Prisons (Drug Addicts)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for (1) the Home Department what steps he is taking to segregate non drug addicts from drug addicts in prisons. [75466]

(2) what estimate he makes of the number of prisoners who adopt a drug habit whilst in prison. [75467]

(3) what action he is taking (a) to segregate inmates on first prison sentence and (b) to reduce recidivism among first time prisoners. [74929]

(4) if he will increase the segregation of prisoners in order to reduce (a) recidivism and (b) prison drug use. [75464]

Hilary Benn: Specific reconviction figures are not collected for first time prisoners. The Prison Service has been set a target to reduce the rate of reconvictions of all released prisoners by five per cent. compared to the predicted rate by 2004. To meet this target the Prison Service draws on 'What Works' research to provide regimes which are effective in tackling offending behaviour and the factors which contribute towards re-offending.

There is no evidence to suggest that segregating prisoners leads to a reduction in recidivism or overall drug use. There are no statistics available on which to base an estimate of the numbers of prisoners who adopt a drug habit whilst in prison; drug taking by its nature is a covert activity.

Voluntary drug testing programmes are available for prisoners who wish to make a commitment to remain drug free. Ninety prisons currently have voluntary drug testing units in operation. These do not provide segregation but they do provide a degree of separation from prisoners not making a formal commitment to remain drug free.

Drug Dealers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will commit more resources to police forces in order to combat drug dealers who target the young operating in housing estates and outside schools. [69350]

Mr. Denham: The Government are committed to working to protect the young from any dealers who target them.

Police authorities also participate in the Government's wider drugs' strategy. Over the three years from 2001–02 to 2003–04, the Home Office has made available £220 million for the Communities Against Drugs (CAD) programme. This scheme provides for Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships and Drugs Action Teams (DATs) to build a stronger community links and helps local communities tackle neighbourhood drugs problems and associated crime.

The communities themselves allocate the money to local projects reflecting their priorities in the fight against drugs, through education/support programmes, diversionary schemes and the disruption of the local drugs supply market. Police are involved in the partnership activities and receive financial support from the CAD programme.

Drug Treatment and Testing Orders

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug treatment and testing orders have been issued in (a) Hampshire and (b) the Portsmouth, South constituency; and if he will make a statement. [76526]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The drug treatment and testing order (DTTO) was introduced under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and rolled out to courts in England and Wales on 1 October 2000, after successfully being piloted. Between 1 April 2001 and 31 July 2002, 192 DTTOs were made in Hampshire, of which 47 orders were made in Portsmouth (including Portsmouth, Fareham and Havant).

DTTO figures for individual constituencies are not available.

Drug-related Crimes

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) racially motivated, (b) violent, (c) street and (d) drug-related crimes were reported in (i) Lancashire and (ii) the North-West of England in the last 12 months. [73885]

Mr. Denham: Numbers of reported crimes are not collected centrally. Numbers of crimes recorded by the police in the year ending March 2002 are given in the table. As some of the forces in the North West, including Lancashire, implemented the principles of the National Crime Recording Standard in advance of its national implementation in April 2002, the given figures cannot be directly compared with those for previous years.

The crime categories for which racially aggravated crimes are recorded separately are harassment, other wounding, common assault and criminal damage. The total numbers of these racially aggravated crimes are given in the table.

Violent crime is comprised of the offence groups of violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery.

'Street crime' is not a separate category in recorded crime figures, which are based on legal definitions. Figures are given for robberies of personal property

Recorded crime figures do not contain details of whether offences are related to offenders' drug habits. Figures for offences specifically related to drugs themselves, including for example trafficking and possession of drugs, are given.

Recorded crimes in the year ending March 2002

	Lancashire	North West Government Region
Racially aggravated offences	1,057	4,746
Violent crimes	18,535	106,892
Robbery of personal property	1,437	13,656
Drug offences	3,169	14,775

Drugs-related Deaths

Mr. Bryant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives to coroners' courts on recording deaths as drugs-related. [75331]

Hilary Benn: Coroners were advised about recommended verdicts in drugs-related deaths when these verdicts were first introduced in 1984. They have since been encouraged to report details for the National Programme on Substance Abuse Deaths, and have been informed of the action plan to prevent drugs-related deaths in the light of the recent report from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs. In order to improve surveillance and monitoring, we will provide new guidance for coroners by March 2003.

Dysfunctional Families

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to support dysfunctional families. [75322]

Beverley Hughes: All families need help from time to time, which is why we have a wide range of policies to help all families bring up their children in the best possible way.

In addition, we have in place measures that support those most in need.

Fireworks

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to tackle the misuse of fireworks. [75342]

Mr. Denham: We have been working closely with the Department of Trade and Industry to address the issue of fireworks safety and misuse, and to curb the problem of noise and nuisance they cause. My hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Trade and Industry (Melanie Johnson) launched this year's safety campaign on 15 October when she announced a range of measures, including proposals to ban air bombs.

We are encouraging trading standards officers, Health and Safety Executive and police forces to make full use of existing legislation. Throwing fireworks is one of the offences covered in the fixed penalty notice scheme being piloted in four police force areas. A monitoring scheme has also been set up with nine CDRPs to focus on best practice and identify clearly the number and scale of the problems caused.

Hampshire Constabulary

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police have left the Hampshire Constabulary in the last 12 months because of (a) retirement, (b) early retirement, (c) injury and (d) other employment; and if he will make a statement. [76503]

Mr. Denham: The precise information requested is not collected centrally. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary has provided the figures set out in the table for the 12 months ending 31 March 2002.

Hampshire constabulary wastage 2001–2002

	Number
Dismissed or required to resign	4
Voluntary resignations	48
Medical retirements	19
Ordinary retirements	102
Transfers	61
Died in service	1
Total wastage	234

Illegal Raves

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent guidelines he has issued to chief constables on the control of illegal raves in England. [76121]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Guidance was issued to police on illegal raves in November 1994 and was contained in Home Office circular 45/94. This circular contained an introductory guide to provisions in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. We have made clear in the White Paper "Justice for All" (CM 5563) our intentions to supplement police powers to deal with nuisance caused with raves, and legislation will follow at the earliest opportunity: further guidance to the police will then be issued.

Immigration Service Removal Centres

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the net cost is in a full year of substituting contract and agency staff to undertake work in removal centres that previously was undertaken by detainees; from what budget the extra cost is taken; what proposals he has for giving financial incentives to detainees to assist in the running of removal centres; what factors he considered before deciding to prevent detainees from working; and if he will make a statement. [75422]

Beverley Hughes: Immigration detainees held in Immigration Service removal centres have never been required to work nor are they expected to assist in the running of the centres.

Following their redesignation earlier this year as removal centres, the prison service detention facilities at Dover, Haslar and Lindholme ceased to operate under Prison Rules. As a consequence, detainees no longer had the opportunity to undertake paid employment in the centres and the practice of relying on such work for the provision of certain ancillary services came to an end. Work formerly undertaken by detainees at these centres has been contracted out or transferred to agency staff. For this year this has resulted in a net additional cost of £1.09 million. This will be met from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's budget.

Regimes in immigration removal centres provide detainees with a wide range of constructive activities based on education, crafts, physical education, religion and recreation. All activities are voluntary although detainees are encouraged to take part in them. Some centres provide a cash allowance, although not as an incentive to engage in activities, and we are considering standardising this and making it universal. While we are considering incentives and further ways to enhance activities available to detainees, we have no plans to require detainees to undertake paid work or to assist in the running of removal centres.

Imprisonment of Juveniles

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to end and to reduce imprisonment of juveniles. [75345]

Hilary Benn: The Government strongly believe that custody for juveniles should very much be a last resort, and we have provided the courts with a wide range of community-based penalties which are specifically targeted at young people. Sadly, however, we recognise that there is a small minority of young people—just 4 per cent. of those juveniles dealt with by police and courts each year—whose offending is so serious or so persistent, that custody may be the only immediate answer. In those cases, we must ensure that such a sentence is as constructive an experience for them as possible, and to this end we have introduced the new Detention and Training Order for juveniles and improved the custodial regimes with supervision and support after release.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the outcome was of the Justice and Home Affairs and Civil Protection Council held in Brussels on 14 and 15 October; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [76018]

Mr. Blunkett: Together with my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Filkin and my noble Friend Baroness Scotland, I represented the United Kingdom at the Justice and Home Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 14 and 15 October.

The A points were approved as in document PTS A 48 (12810/02) (a copy of which has been placed in the Library) with the exception of item 9. The Council also reached political agreement on the Directive on legal aid and the Framework Decision on combating sexual exploitation of children and child pornography.

The Framework Decision on combating corruption in the private sector and the Framework Decision laying down minimum provisions on the constituent elements of criminal acts and penalties in the field of drug trafficking remained subject to reservations on the scope of the offence and the penalties for trafficking in small quantities of drugs respectively.

The Council discussed whether the Framework Decision on confiscation of crime-related proceeds, instrumentalities and property should create an obligation on member states to provide for confiscation of property beyond that arising directly from the offence. Lord Filkin argued that it should and that the burden should be on the offender to prove that the property was acquired legitimately. The majority of member states agreed but argued that this obligation should arise only in circumstances involving a limited number of offences and that the burden should be on the court to establish the origin of the property. Member states shared the view that there should not be an automatic assumption that the property of a spouse or co-habitee was also acquired from criminal proceeds.

The Council examined some of the outstanding reservations on the Framework Decision on the application of the principle of mutual recognition to financial penalties. There was agreement to include a provision recognising the application of fundamental human rights, subject to negotiation of an accompanying Recital. Member states were, however, divided on the level of the financial threshold below which member states could refuse to execute a financial penalty. Four member states were also unable to accept the absence of a dual criminality requirement in the instrument.

The Council reached a general approach on the Council Decision on the investigation and prosecution of war crimes, genocide and crimes against humanity subject to parliamentary scrutiny reserves from five member states, including the UK, and pending the opinion of the European Parliament.

The Presidency sought agreement to the Council Decision establishing a mechanism for evaluating the legal systems and their implementation at national level in the fight against terrorism. Lord Filkin expressed the Government's broad support for the measure but said that it could not enter into a political agreement since the text remained subject to parliamentary scrutiny in the UK. He reserved the right to return to the substance. Two other member states also maintained parliamentary scrutiny reserves.

The Council agreed the principles for determining the selection procedure for the appointment of the Europol Directorate as part of the proposal for amending the Europol Staff Regulations. Lord Filkin said that it was essential to establish a fair and open procedure which led to appointment on merit.

Justice and Home Affairs Ministers of the member states and of candidate countries met in the margins of the Council and discussed the timetable for the removal of internal frontier controls in the Schengen area post-enlargement. There was also a discussion of the obligations and responsibilities created by new instruments applying the principle of mutual recognition. Lord Filkin emphasised that the successful application of these instruments required trust in each other's judicial systems. He welcomed the Commission's new proposals for monitoring arrangements to be included in the accession treaties. A Declaration was agreed condemning violence against commercial lorry drivers. The candidate countries were informed of the Council's intention to agree, the following day, a declaration concerning applications for asylum from citizens of the candidate countries.

The Commission presented its two proposals for a Council Directive on minimum standards on procedures in member states for granting and withdrawing refugee status and a Council Directive on the conditions of entry and residence of third-country nationals for the purposes of studies or other purposes. The Commission also reported on its progress in negotiating readmission agreements with third countries. The Presidency presented a draft programme on EU returns to Afghanistan.

The Presidency provided information on member states' planned projects to follow up the plan for the management of the external borders and the plan for fighting illegal immigration and trafficking in human beings. The Council agreed conclusions on action to be taken as a matter of urgency to further prevent and combat illegal migration and trafficking in human beings.

The Council discussed the criteria for assigning responsibility for an asylum claim and the deadlines for transfers in the Regulation establishing the criteria and mechanisms for determining the member states responsible for examining an asylum application lodged in one of the member states by a third-country national (Dublin II). Lord Filkin supported the existing qualifying period for the application of the illegal presence criterion and called for the deletion of the requirement to prove illegal entry before applying this criterion.

The Council discussed the definitions of a refugee and the concept of "serious and unjustified harm" in the Council Directive on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third-country nationals and stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection. The UK and the Presidency welcomed a proposal from Commissioner Vitorino reformulating the definition of "serious and unjustified harm" to clarify its scope of application in conflict situations, responding to UK concerns.

The Presidency sought adoption of the Directive laying down minimum standards for the reception of asylum seekers in member states. One member state maintained the view that the provision on access to labour markets should be deleted. The Presidency agreed that the Council should work with a view to incorporating an addition to the Directive, proposed by the UK, to allow a member state to refuse support in cases where the applicant does not submit his claim as soon as reasonably practicable. The Council would seek to approve the Directive at its November meeting.

The Council agreed conclusions on the integration of third country nationals and discussed the outstanding issues on the Council Directive concerning the status of third-country nationals who are long-term residents. The majority of member states were able to accept the inclusion of refugees within the scope of the text and favoured a five year residence requirement. There was also general support for the measures regarding rights of mobility for third country nationals. The UK has not opted in to the adoption of this measure.

Ministers agreed a Declaration asserting that from the point of signature of the Accession Treaties applications for asylum from citizens from the EU candidate countries should be treated as manifestly unfounded.

The Council also invited COREPER to report on the possibility of agreeing a list of safe third countries and the Schengen Mixed Committee to consider possible amendments to the Schengen manual with a view to strengthening the procedures for passport control at the Schengen area entry points.

Local Government Funding Settlement

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with chief constables on the effect on police forces of the proposed local government funding settlement. [75343]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary regularly meets chief constables. Matters of police funding and the local government funding settlement are discussed periodically.

Money Laundering

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Government agencies are responsible for tackling money laundering in the UK. [75076]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: A number of Government agencies have responsibility for combating money laundering in the United Kingdom.

In England and Wales, the Economic Crime Branch of the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) is responsible for the receipt, analysis and dissemination of all reports made in the United Kingdom which are indicative of a suspicion of money laundering. Subsequent investigations of a suspected money laundering offence are undertaken primarily by police forces, the National Crime Squad or Her Majesty's Customs and Excise (HMCE), but can also fall within the investigative remit of other agencies such as the Serious Fraud Office or Inland Revenue. Prosecutions for money laundering offences are conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service and HMCE.

In relation to Scotland, investigations of a suspected money laundering offence are carried out by the police and Customs and Excise under the direction of the procurator fiscal. Prosecutions are conducted by the Lord Advocate or his representative, the procurator fiscal.

In addition, the Financial Services Authority has the power to make rules on money laundering, and impose civil penalties for breaches of those rules. It also has the power to prosecute breaches of the Money Laundering Regulations. HMCE has responsibility for the oversight of Money Service Operators and has powers to prosecute for a range of money laundering offences.

In November 2001, the Government published its National Asset Recovery Strategy drawn up by the Asset Recovery Committee. One of the central aims of the strategy is to prevent criminals and their associates from laundering the proceeds of criminal conduct, and to detect and prosecute such laundering where it occurs. The strategy has the support of the Departments and agencies involved in the fight against money laundering activity who have committed themselves to acting in accordance with its principles.

National Crime Intelligence Service Report

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the recent National Crime Intelligence Service report. [73852]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The National Criminal Intelligence Service published their annual assessment of the threat to the United Kingdom from serious and organised crime on 22 July. The assessment, based on available information and intelligence, is important in providing an authoritative statement on the threat and informing the Government's response to it.

Nationality, Asylum and Immigration Bill

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) amendments and (b) new clauses he has introduced to the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill (i) in the Commons between Second Reading and the commencement of Committee stage, (ii) in the Commons during Committee stage, (iii) in the Commons during Report stage and (iv) subsequently. [75409]

Beverley Hughes: The numbers of Government amendments and new clauses introduced into the Nationality, Asylum and Immigration Bill since 12 April 2002 are set out in the table. The majority were minor or technical. The substantive amendments which were introduced in the Lords reflected new policy developments and additional time was given to the Bill with the recommitment of Parts III, V and VIII.

Bill stage	Amendments	New clauses
(i) between Second Reading and Committee	3	1
(ii) during Commons Committee stage	105	5
(iii) during Commons Report	95	7
(iv) subsequent to Commons Report	139	12
Total	342	25

Nottingham Police

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff were employed by the Nottinghamshire Police on (i) 31 March 1997, (ii) 31 March 1998, (iii) 31 March 1999, (iv) 31 March 2000, (v) 31 March 2001, (vi) 31 March 2002 and (vii) 31 September 2002; and what the projected number is for 31 March 2003. [77353]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table. Police strength information for September 2002 is not yet available. Plans for strength in March 2003 are a matter for the Chief Constable.

Nottinghamshire Police

Oakington Reception Centre

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to ensure that those released from Oakington Reception Centre pending appeals have a duty to report daily or weekly to the police or other authorities. [75399]

Beverley Hughes: Those released from Oakington are granted temporary admission. As part of the conditions attached to this they can be required to live at a specified address and to report at specified times to an immigration or police officer.

It is Government policy that wherever possible asylum seekers on temporary admission should be required to report at regular intervals to immigration officers, who are best placed to monitor progress on the application and act on up-to-date information.

The Immigration Service already has eight reporting centres for this purpose and more are planned. Immigration officers also operate reporting in a number of police stations in the regions. In all cases where those released from Oakington are granted temporary admission to an area with existing reporting facilities, reporting restrictions will be imposed. In addition the Immigration Service will shortly be introducing teams of visiting officers and a mobile reporting van. This will result in more asylum seekers being required to report to an immigration officer on a regular basis.

Persistent Offenders

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to tackle the problem of persistent re-offending; and if he will make a statement. [75738]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 23 October 2002]: Last week we announced that a persistent offender scheme will start in February 2003 across the whole criminal justice system. Its aim will be to target the most prolific offenders, to bring more offences committed by them to justice, and to rehabilitate them more effectively. This scheme is an important part of the 'Narrowing the Justice Gap' programme which aims to reduce the difference between the number of crimes reported to the police and the number of offences brought to justice. In addition the Government have already: given the courts new secure remand and tagging powers for 12 to 16-year olds who repeatedly offend on bail; funded the Youth Justice Board's intensive supervision and surveillance programmes for the most prolific young offenders; and renewed its commitment to maintain the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders at or below 71 days.

Police (Part-time)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to recruit part-time police officers and to allow full-time officers to change to part-time if they wish to (a) before and (b) after they have completed 30 years service. [75317]

Mr. Denham: All new recruits may apply to work part-time, as may established police officers of all ranks, regardless of whether officers have completed 30 years' service or not. Managers must give full consideration to all requests to change to part-time working, taking into account operational needs.

As part of the Police Negotiating Board (PNB) Agreement of 9 May, part-time working will be made easier for officers in all ranks, regardless of whether they have completed 30 years service or not. We plan to remove the current 16-hour a week minimum requirement for part-time working by 1 April 2003, together with the requirement for job sharing in respect of middle and senior ranks.

Police (Pay)

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans to improve the pay and conditions for frontline police officers. [75348]

Mr. Denham: The Police Negotiating Board (PNB) Agreement of 9 May, approved by the Secretary of State, contains a number of measures that will improve the pay and conditions of all police officers and particularly frontline officers from 1 April 2003. There will be a new special priority payment scheme which is targeted on frontline operational officers in particular and gives extra rewards to officers in the most difficult and demanding posts. In addition, there will be increases in basic pay on top of the annual police pay award, shorter pay scales and competence-related pay for the most experienced officers in the federated ranks.

Police (Surrey)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to ensure the maintenance of present levels of police services in Surrey. [75319]

Mr. Wills: Sufficient resources will be provided to support all police authorities, including Surrey, in maintaining stable levels of service and continuity in local policing.

Police Authority Funding

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement on proposed changes to the police funding formula and their impact on future police authority funding. [75328]

Mr. Denham: I am considering all the responses received on the proposed changes to the police funding formula. A final decision will be taken shortly.

Police Numbers

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to expand the provision of community officers to all areas: and over what timescale. [75330]

Mr. Denham: The number of police officers in England and Wales is the highest ever, 129,603 officers on 31 March 2002. Police strength is on track to reach our target of 130,000 officers by March 2003. We have set a further target for it to reach 132,500 officers in 2004.

Decisions about the deployment of officers to community policing or other duties are for Chief Officers.

Community Support Officers (CSOs) will have a vital role to play in support of the police. By tackling anti-social behaviour and the host of public nuisance, disorder and environmental problems that accompany it, they will make an invaluable contribution to community safety and regeneration.

More than £19 million has been made available this year to recruit, train and deploy CSOs. Twenty-seven police forces in England and Wales bid for a share of this fund and we were able to fund them all. Hertfordshire made a successful bid for 14 CSOs to provide reassurance and a visible presence for communities in Watford and Stevenage.

We expect to see more than 1,000 CSOs on the streets by April 2003 and more than 4,000 by 2005.

Police Paperwork

Roger Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the paperwork of police officers. [75337]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to tackling the administrative burdens and inefficient working practices that keep officers off the streets. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary established a task force, under the chairmanship of Sir David O'Dowd, to identify ways in which forces can free up the time of front line officers. The task force's report was published on 17 September and contained 52 recommendations to increase the presence of police in communities. This is a vital opportunity to change the culture of the police service and bring about a real difference to the everyday lives of officers on the front line.

We have now set up a steering group, co-chaired by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Home Office, to take forward these recommendations. We are working with key stakeholders to reduce bureaucracy in police stations, on the streets and in court.

Police Vehicles

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what measures are being taken to reduce the number of collisions involving police vehicles which lead to injury and death. [75333]

Mr. Denham: Measures already in place include a new police driver training course, launched in December 2000, which introduced a universal standard for driving in England and Wales. An essential element of the course is that officers should recognise the need to give priority to public safety above all other considerations such as attending an incident or apprehending a suspect. Where pursuits are concerned, there is a nationally agreed ACPO Pursuit Code of Practice and it is already police policy to consider continuously the consequences of a pursuit and whether to break it off. In addition, all forces have adopted some or most of the recommendations from the 1998 Lind Report on Police Pursuit Driver Training.

Policing Charges

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review his guidance in respect of policing charges. [75324]

Hilary Benn: Guidance on recovering costs for the policing of football matches is set out in Home Office Circular 34/2000. We have recently set up a working group, with representatives of the Home Office, Department for Culture Media and Sport, Association of Chief Police Officers and the football authorities to consider a range of issues, including charging for the policing of matches, and the investment of football clubs in the wider community.

Prisons

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the prison population. [75316]

Hilary Benn: The Government believe that prison is right for those convicted of an offence who are a danger to the public or who are serious or persistent offenders and that sentences served should be as long as necessary for punishment, public protection and rehabilitation but no longer. It also recognises that short sentences with no support and no supervision after release do not allow the correctional services to do effective behavioural or rehabilitation work with offenders. We set out our proposals for reducing the use of short sentences in the White Paper "Justice for All".

Home detention curfew plays an important role in managing the prison population by enabling prisoners to be released from prison early, while still subject to restrictions placed on their liberty. This facilitates a smoother and more effective integration back into the community and helps offenders to serve or resume employment or training as soon as possible.

As also announced in the White Paper "Justice for All" I have commissioned an independent review of the correctional services in England and Wales looking particularly at effectiveness and value for money in the delivery of services to reduce re-offending and how we improve our ability to manage the prison population. This review is in progress. As well as the correctional services, other professional and voluntary sector stakeholders have also been invited to submit their views.

Racial Equality Services

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much money has been spent on racial equality services by the Commission for Racial Equality in Scotland in each of the last five years; [74979]

(2) what the breakdown of spending is in each of the areas of Scotland served by a racial equality council. [74978]

Beverley Hughes: The total spend on racial equality services in each of the last five years broken down by spend in each area of Scotland served by a Racial Equality Council (REC) is as follows:

Rape

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what his estimate is of the number of cases of rape that went unreported in (a) Lancashire and (b) the north-west of England in the last 12 months; [73866]

(2) what his estimate is of the number of cases of rape that went unreported in Wales in the last 12 months; [73867]

(3) how many cases of rape were reported in (a) Wales, (b) Lancashire and (c) the North West of England in the last 12 months. [73813]

Hilary Benn: The number of rapes cases reported to the police is not available centrally. The following details the number of rape incidents (both male and female) recorded by the police in the 2001–02 financial year.

Recorded crimes of rape in Wales, Lancashire and the north-west of England

2001–02	Number
Wales	420
Lancashire	194
North-west	1,174

It should be noted however that the British Crime Survey (BCS) estimates that only 20 per cent. of rapes come to the attention of the police (Home Office Research Study 237). In the calendar year 1999 there were 8,281 incidents of rape recorded by the police in England and Wales; however the British Crime Survey estimates that there were 61,000 rape victims (once or more) aged 16 to 59, in this year.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action she plans to take to help protect female students from rape. [73799]

Hilary Benn: The Government provide targeted crime prevention advice to students regarding their personal safety. While not intending to cause unwarranted alarm, this advice aims to equip both male and female students with information to make themselves safer by taking some common sense precautions. The Government have undertaken a wide range of initiatives across the criminal justice system aimed at protecting women and men—including students—from rape.

One of the key parts of our preventative strategy is the management of previous offenders, to prevent re-offending. Recent legislative changes have provided an improved framework within which the Prison Services, the National Probation Service, the Police, the Youth Justice Board and others can work together to assess and manage the risk posed by sex offenders both in custody and in the community.

Other initiatives include the introduction of a rigorous assessment system throughout the Prison and Probation Services.

We have taken a number of key steps with regard to sentencing of sexual offenders. The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced extended sentences for serious sexual and violent offences. Under the broad review of sentencing that began in July 2001, we are looking at tougher determinate sentences for sex offenders that will ensure that they stay in prison, up to the full term if necessary, so long as they present a risk of harm to our communities. We are also undertaking a root and branch review of sex offences legislation, in order to provide new, coherent, and clear law to protect individuals from abuse and exploitation. We will be publishing our proposals for legislative reform shortly.

The Violence Against Women (VAW) initiative is a key part of the Home Office's Crime Reduction Programme (CRP). The aim of the VAW initiative is to identify the most effective and cost effective approaches to reducing domestic violence and rape and sexual assault by known perpetrators.

In July of this year we published an inter-agency action plan ope, which details practical measures across the criminal justice system to:

Improve the investigation of rape cases;

Enhance the quality of advice, decision making, case preparation and presentation at court, and;

Better the treatment of victims and witnesses in cases involving allegations of rape.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government is taking to prevent rape and related crimes against women and to promote rehabilitation after the crime has occurred. [73845]

Hilary Benn: The Government has undertaken a wide range of initiatives across the criminal justice system aimed at preventing rape and supporting victims.The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced extended sentences for serious sexual and violent offences. Under the review of sentencing that began in July 2001 we are looking at tougher determinate sentences for sex offenders. We have also undertaken a review of sex offences legislation. We will be publishing our proposals for legislative reform shortly.

An important part of our preventative strategy is the management of previous offenders to stop re-offending. Recent legislative changes, including the establishment of the multi-agency public protection panels, have improved the way in which public protection agencies—the prison services, the national probation service, the police, the Youth Justice Board and others—work together to assess and manage the risk posed by offenders both in custody and in the community.

The probation service has run sex offender programmes for many years, which aim to reduce the risk of re-offending by changing the offender's behaviour. The programmes have recently been researched and evaluated and three accredited programmes, which challenge conventional thinking regarding the deviance and social inadequacy of sex offenders, are now being implemented in England and Wales. The service is also working on an accommodation plan, since the provision of appropriate accommodation is essential to the management of sex offenders in the community. Other initiatives to prevent rape include the introduction of a rigorous assessment system throughout the prison and probation services.

The Violence Against Women (VAW) initiative is a key part of the Home Office's Crime Reduction Programme (CRP). The aim of the VAW initiative is to identify the most effective and cost effective approaches to reducing domestic violence and rape and sexual assault by known perpetrators. Its projects will be independently evaluated to provide evidence of impact and cost effectiveness, with a view to disseminating findings and recommendations from the successful projects as good practice.

In July of this year the Home Department published an action plan on rape, which details practical measures across the criminal justice system to: improve the investigation of rape cases; enhance the quality of advice, decision making, case preparation and presentation at court; and, provide better treatment of victims and witnesses in cases involving allegations of rape.

We are also continuing our work to reduce the occurrence of assaults against women through the provision of targeted crime prevention advice to women regarding their personal safety. While not intending to cause unwarranted alarm, this advice aims to equip women with information to make themselves safer by taking some common sense precautions.

The Government have also taken action to help the victims of rape. We have: provided grant support to the Rape Crisis Federation; more than doubled the grant to Victim Support, which has helped to introduce a national telephone helpline for victims in magistrates courts; improved payments made to victims of sexual offences by the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and, given victims in serious cases—where offenders are sentenced to 12 months or more for a violent or sexual offence—the right to be consulted about the release plans of those who attacked them.

Reoffenders

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of notifiable offences is committed by persistent reoffenders; and if he will make a statement. [75739]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 23 October 2002]: Research suggests that about half of notifiable offences are committed by persistent reoffenders; and that about 15 per cent. of notifiable offences are committed by the core group of offenders who will be targeted under the persistent offender scheme, due to start in February 2003. These estimates are derived from studies on the reconviction of offenders for more serious crimes, with assumptions made to relate them to unsolved crimes. Details of the relevant research can be found in Annex B of the White Paper "Criminal Justice: the Way Ahead" (February 2001).

Sex Offenders Act 1997

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when (a) child murderers and (b) sex offenders, who have been convicted abroad and who subsequently return to the Untied Kingdom, will have their details recorded on the sex offenders' register and be monitored and controlled in the same way that would occur if they had been convicted in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [74925]

Hilary Benn: The review of Part One of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 looked at ways of both:

requiring offenders convicted of sex offences abroad to register on their arrival in the UK; and imposing the registration requirements on offenders who commit offences of violence, including murder, when there is a sexual element to the offence.

The Government consulted on the proposals contained in the review and responses are currently being analysed. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has announced that he intends to publish his proposals for reform of the law in the Autumn and to legislate specifically to enable sex offenders from abroad to be required to register. Such registration would attract the full range of mechanisms for monitoring and control as domestic sex offenders.

Special Constables

Matthew Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables are members of the police forces in England and Wales as at the beginning of April; and what his estimates are of the numbers in (a) April 2003 and (b) April 2004. [75334]

Mr. Denham: Data on special constabulary strength is collected for March and September each year. On 31 March 2002 there were 11,598 serving special constables in police forces in England and Wales.

We have made it clear that the special constabulary has a vital role to play in reducing crime and providing reassurance to the public. The Government is committed to increasing the numbers of specials. We are working with the police service on a number of measures, including a new headline role, new training packages and good practice guidance, to help forces improve performance on the recruitment, management and deployment of specials. A number of "Specials Champions" forces have been identified to take forward iniatives and support the good practice guidance. Deputy Chief Constable, Peter Fahy, of Surrey Police has agreed to lead the police on this work.

Street Crime

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent progress has been made in reducing street crime in Sussex. [75157]

Mr. Denham: The Government's street crime initiative is targeted at the 10 forces which account for 83 per cent. of robbery in England and Wales. The initiative is serving to identify and remove any systemic blockages which currently hinder the tackling of street crime not only in those 10 areas, but across the country. Good practice in partnership working across the criminal justice system and between other agencies will be disseminated to all areas, including Sussex.

The Government have recently published figures for the first six months of the initiative including a document detailing the achievements made through partnership working, the "Delivering the Street Crime Initiative: Partnership in Operation" can be found in the Library or on the Crime Reduction website on www.crimereduction.gov.uk/streetcrime.

Examples of what has been achieved so far which have national implication are:

The extension of section 130 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 to provide for remands of 12 to 16-year-olds. This power has now been extended to the rest of the country.

The extension of the Bail Act 1976 and the Child and Young Persons Act 1969 to provide tagging while on bail for 12 to 17-year-olds. Tagging for 12 to 16-year-olds has now been extended to the rest of the country. The provision of door-steeping conditions while on bail which allows police officers to check on curfew conditions.

To combat the theft of mobile phones, we have introduced legislation making the reprogramming of the phones unique identifying number (IMEI) illegal.

Through this initiative we are sending out a clear signal that we will not tolerate crime on our streets, wherever it occurs.

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on coordination of policies on street crime. [75338]

Mr. Denham: The Street Crime Action Group, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, has been meeting regularly since March. These meetings involve ministerial colleagues from across Government, the police and other criminal justice agencies, and local government. The group's discussions have focussed on how the police in the 10 areas with the highest levels of street crime can target the problem most effectively. They have also been on how the whole of Government can make a difference, how other agencies, the Crown Prosecution Service, the courts, the Youth Justice Board, schools, local authorities, health, education and social services can join together in a concerted effort to rid the streets of crime on a sustainable basis.

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the levels of street crime. [75339]

Mr. Denham: On 14 October 2002, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced the results of the Street Crime Initiative to date. The figures show that, since the start of the initiative, street crime has fallen by 16 per cent. during the period April to September in the 10 police forces which accounted for over 80 per cent. of the robbery problem in 2001–02. For robbery, the more serious offence, the number of offences in September is 25 per cent. lower than March for the 10 forces as a whole.

The new figures show that what was an escalating situation has been reversed over the period since the launch of the Street Crime Initiative. There has been a 10 per cent. reduction (4,600 offences) in the number of robberies during the period April to September, compared to the same period last year.

The full report, "Street Crime Initiative: Figures to the end of September", is available in the Library.

Strip Searching

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on action taken following the recent Prison Service report on strip searching; what assessment he has made of technological developments that might replace routine strip searching; what his estimate is of the cost of replacing strip searching by metal detectors at Her Majesty's Prison, Holloway; what guidance he has issued on Prison Service policy and minor changes in procedures; what research he has commissioned to explore further changes in strip searching procedures; and what arrangements he has made for the statistical recording and monitoring of strip searches. [74268]

Hilary Benn: The Review of Searching was an internal Prison Service review. The recommendations were accepted by the Prison Service Management Board and action to implement the recommendations, including the issue of policy guidance, has been or is being taken.

The recommendations of the review were to:

1. commission research into the effectiveness of strip searching;

2. introduce procedures to ensure that new receptions understand they will be strip searched and what is involved;

3. evaluate emerging technology;

4. ensure statistical recording and monitoring of strip searches will be provided using future information technology (IT) to be introduced throughout the Service;

5. issue guidance on strip searching of menstruating women;

6. issue guidance on strip searching of pregnant, disabled or elderly prisoners;

7. post-operative and bedridden prisoners, and those who are in severe pain or have recently given birth, should be strip searched only in exceptional circumstances;

8. when the prison officer entry level training course is revised, include awareness of searching of under-18s;

9. revise searching strategies and make specific provisions for young offender institutions (YOIs) continuing to hold juveniles. New strategies for prisons to be re-roled as juvenile centres;

10. issue guidance that gender is not a genuine occupational qualification for cell searching;

11. consider using the sideways stance for rub down searching of violent prisoners;

12. ensure managers set and communicate realistic targets for rub down searches;

13. cease the practice of randomly rub down searching official and professional visitors to Category C and D prisons and to most women's prisons and YOIs;

14. draw a distinction between solicitors and barristers, and legal advisers who are not counted as solicitors for the purposes of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE), and should be searched as though they were domestic visitors;

15. issue guidance on how to react to a passive drug dog indication; and

16. issue guidance on when a prisoner may be in the 'sight' of the person of the opposite sex, for the purposes of Prison Rule 41(3).

A copy of the review is available in the Library.

12 of the 16 recommendations have now been implemented, and action on recommendations 2, 4, 11 and 14 is in hand.

Recommendation 2 will be implemented when the Prison Service Order on Reception, which is currently being reviewed, is re-issued. Recommendations 11 and 14 will be covered in the revision of the Security Manual, which is under way. Recommendation 4 is that the Prison Service should make arrangements for the statistical recording and monitoring of strip searches. An IT solution to this requirement is being considered by the Prison Service's IT provider, although its achievement will depend on an assessment of the relative priority compared with other major IT developments needed by the service.

Recommendation 3 was to set aside resources to evaluate technology to replace routine strip searching. The Prison Service has set aside resources to enable the Police Scientific Development Branch to do this. As present, there are no suitable available alternatives capable of finding all items found during a search, such as drugs, weapons or other contraband.

There are no plans to use metal detectors in place of strip searching at Holloway prison, or elsewhere. Metal detectors are unable to detect drugs and any non-metallic contraband hidden beneath clothing.

A Prison Service Instruction issued in August 2000 dealt with the minor changes in procedures covered in recommendations 5, 6, 7, 10, 12 and 16. Governors were asked to comply with recommendations 9, 13 and 15 in separate guidance and correspondence.

The Prison Service has commissioned research into strip searching procedures and perceptions (to meet recommendation 1). The research will be carried out by a research team from Nottingham University. The research methodology is being developed, and the research will be carried out in a representative sample of prisons over the next nine months. The researchers are due to make their report to the Prison Service by September 2003.

Victim Impact Statements

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Lord Chancellor's Department about victim impact statements. [75340]

Hilary Benn: The Lord Chancellor's Department (LCD) was closely involved in developing the new Victim Personal Statement Scheme, which was introduced in October 2001. Since then, the LCD has been represented on the Home Office led working group, which is overseeing the evaluation for the scheme.

Violent Crime

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children have died from violence in each of the last five years. [75553]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 21 October 2002]: Homicide statistics are published annually in Chapter 4 of "'Criminal Statistics England and Wales'. Data are published on a calendar year basis up to 1997 and a financial year basis from 1997–98. The latest statistics relating to 2000–01 were published in December 2001 in "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 2000". Table 4.6 gives currently recorded homicides by age and gender of victim.

Homicides of children under 16 years are given in the following table.

	Age of victim
	Under one year	One and under five years	Five and under 16 years
1996	27	20	33
1997	33	20	30

1998–99	40	22	25
1999–2000	31	13	23
2000–01	50	19	29

Note:
Data as at 3 October 2001; figures are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and by the courts or as further information becomes available.

Workers from Eire

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions there are on the entry into the UK of workers from Eire who have been accepted by that country from EU candidate countries. [75904]

Beverley Hughes: Workers from EU candidate States seeking entry to the United Kingdom (UK) through the Common Travel Area remain subject to immigration control. A work permit, and where appropriate a visa, would be required if they sought leave to enter the UK to work.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefits Offices

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of those employed in benefits offices were over 55 years old in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [74313]

Mr McCartney: Information on the percentage of staff employed in benefits offices who were over 55 years old at 30 April in each of the last five years is in the following table.

Date	Percentage of staff over 55
April 2002	8.1
April 2001	6.9
April 2000	5.9
April 1999	5.3
April 1998	5.4

Note:
2002 figures include staff from the former Employment Service because of the creation of Jobcentre Plus

Child Maintenance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 635W, on child maintenance, for what reason the figure given was on a different basis to his Department's PSA target; and if he will make a statement. [77784]

Malcolm Wicks: The figures are consistent with one another.

The figures given in the answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 635W, on child support maintenance, are based on aggregates of:

(a) for 1997, figures, for both total number of parents with care in receipt of the relevant benefit and the number of such parents with care receiving maintenance, for income support, income-based jobseekers allowance, family credit and disability working allowance;

(b) for 2002, figures, for both total number of parents with care in receipt of the relevant benefit and the number of such parents with care receiving maintenance, for income support, income-based Jobseekers allowance and working families tax credit.

The Department's Public Services Agreement target refers only to clients who are in receipt of Income Support.

Departmental Job Vacancies

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many job vacancies there were at (a) administrative assistant or equivalent, (b) administrative officer or equivalent, (c) administrative executive officer, (d) higher executive officer, (e) senior executive officer, (f) grade 7 principal and (g) positions above grade 7 level in his Department for jobs located in (i) London and (ii) the South East between 1April 2001 and 31 March; and what is the total employment for each civil service grade. [76559]

Malcolm Wicks: The information on job vacancies is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information on the total numbers of people employed for each Civil Service grade is in the table.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the basis is of his policy on payment to people who become disabled over the age of 65 years of the mobility component attached to disability benefits; [76031]

(2) what the basis is for the difference in the qualifying period for old claimants and younger claimants for disability benefits. [76035]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 21 October 2002]: Disability living allowance and attendance allowance are designed to provide a contribution towards the extra costs associated with severe disability. The benefits are assessed by looking at the disabled person's care needs and, in the case of disability living allowance, mobility needs.

Disability living allowance was introduced in 1992 by bringing together the separate attendance and mobility allowances into a single benefit, which gave additional help to severely disabled people under age 65 for whom disability is more financially disruptive in terms of lost opportunity to earn and save.

The vast majority of people can expect to have some restrictions as they get older and it is reasonable to expect people to make provision for this. Attendance allowance continues to be available for severely disabled people aged 65 or over who need help with personal care.

Disability living allowance unified and simplified the six months qualifying test inherited from attendance allowance and the 12-month prospective qualifying test inherited from mobility allowance by providing that a severely disabled person must have satisfied the entitlement conditions throughout the past three months and be likely to continue to satisfy them throughout the next six months.

Attendance allowance retains a six month qualifying period because a prospective test is less likely to be relevant to the disabilities—often degenerative—suffered by older people.

The Government believe that this broad framework is fair and sensible, and in particular that it is right to give the most help to those who are severely disabled early in life and who may face limited opportunities to work and save.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make it his policy to allow recipients of disability living allowance to receive these benefits in another European Union country. [76268]

Maria Eagle: Disability living allowance is a non-contributory benefit designed to complement the substantial range of other help available to severely disabled people in the United Kingdom. It has always been Government policy, therefore, that it should be available only to people who normally reside here.

Disability living allowance is listed as a 'special non-contributory' benefit in EEC Regulation 1408/71. Such benefits are granted exclusively in the member state in which a person resides. People covered by the regulation can access any special non-contributory benefits, which are available in their country of residence.

European Year of Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the official British contribution to mark the forthcoming European Year of Disabled People. [76819]

Maria Eagle: The Government is contributing £1 million to fund the UK programme of activity to support the European Year of Disabled People.

We have agreed an overall plan for the European Year, including a theme, "Promote Rights and Participation", funding, and a competitive bidding process for projects at local, regional and national level.

Launch events are being planned for England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales. These will be held in January 03.

We expect to announce the successful projects before the end of this year.

Ex-Service Personnel (Benefits)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to compel local authorities to give disregard for housing and council tax benefit to ex-service personnel. [76984]

Malcolm Wicks: We believe that the current disregard of £10 a week for war disablement and war widows' pensions in the income-related benefits strikes the right balance between acknowledging the special reasons for these pensions and prudent use of public funds.

In addition to the statutory provision, local authorities have the discretionary power to disregard up to the full amount of any war pension in housing benefit and council tax benefit. Any amount on top of the £10 statutory disregard is funded from authorities' own resources.

Local authorities, through their discretionary schemes, are best placed to determine the needs of their local residents, taking account of local priorities. We have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many occupational pensioners have protected claims to incapacity benefit because their initial date of claim preceded the inception of the disallowance of such pensions; and how many of such initial claimants have subsequently returned to work. [76409]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Incapacity benefit recipients with an occupational pension were not separately identified prior to 6 April 2001 as receipt of a pension was irrelevant to their claim. Therefore this information is not available.

Universal Bank

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer of 21 October 2002 to the hon. Member for Harwich, Official Report, column 14, on the Universal Bank, what alternative arrangements he will put in place for those people who will not be able to use the PIN number associated with a Post Office card account. [77785]

Malcolm Wicks: Customers will be able to choose from a range of account options. For some people the Post Office card account may not be the most suitable option and they may prefer to use an account with a cheque book or pass book. Customers will be supplied with information which clearly sets out their account options and which will enable them to decide which is right for them.

Customers who do want a Post Office card account but are unable to cope with a PIN number will have the option of nominating someone else to collect their money for them. In these cases, a second card will be issued.

We have always recognised that there will be a small group of people who cannot be paid directly into an account. We will develop an alternative method to pay this group of benefit recipients.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Modernisation

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make an assessment of the effect of changes to the sitting hours of the House on the working conditions and remuneration of servants thereof. [77435]

Mr. Kirkwood: As the financial and employing authority of the House, the Commission has been giving careful consideration to the possible effects of these proposals. The extent of the changes will depend on the decisions of the House on motions which are to be debated tomorrow. In turn, the effects of the changes will be determined by how the House, Committees and Members adapt to any new arrangements: for example, in the sitting times of Select Committees and the use of Library and catering facilities. The Commission is mindful of its obligations as an employer, and has already asked the Board of Management to assess effects on staff as any changes come into force.

HEALTH

Bed Blocking

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were blocked in Salisbury district hospital in each month since January 2001. [77313]

Ms Blears: Information on delayed discharges has been collected at health authority rather than individual trust level, on a quarterly basis. As of Quarter 1 of 2002–03 this information will be collected quarterly at primary care trust level. All available information has been placed in the Library.

The Government recognises that delayed discharges are a problem across the south. Health and local authorities are working together to take action to improve the situation. In October 2001 the Government announced an extra £300 million in the "cash for change" initiative to tackle delayed transfers of care. Last year Wiltshire received over £700,000, this year over £2 million.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were blocked in Taunton and Somerset NHS Trust beds in each month since January 2001. [77761]

Ms Blears: Information on delayed discharges has been collected at health authority rather than individual trust level, on a quarterly basis. In October 2001 the Government announced an extra £300 million in the 'Cash for Change' initiative to tackle delayed transfers of care. Last year Somerset received over £700,000, this year over £1.5 million.

Blood Products

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make available to the House the findings of his Department's inquiry relating to Lord Owen's period as a Minister at the Department in relation to blood products used for transfusion. [76822]

Ms Blears: I have now instigated a comprehensive review of papers from the period in question, which is estimated to be completed early in the new year. The findings from the review will be made available to the House.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the statistics on the incidence rate of breast cancer for (a) Lincolnshire and (b) each county in England, Wales and Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years for (i) men and (ii) women. [74922]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The answer requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Mr. Cook to Mr. Mark Simmonds dated 28 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the incidence rate of breast cancer in (a) Lincolnshire and (b) each county in England, Wales and Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years for (i) men and (ii) women. (74922)

Incidence rates of breast cancer in women are given in the first table, for each county in England, and for the whole of Wales. The most recent period for which these data are available in the form requested is the nine years from 1991 to 1999. Figures by county in Wales cannot be produced for a similar period because of changes to local government boundaries. The equivalent figures for Northern Ireland are not readily available.

For men, the number of cases of breast cancer is too small to allow reliable calculation of incidence rates. Consequently, the annual numbers of newly registered cases of breast cancer in men, for the whole of England and for Wales, are given in the second table.

[3] The introduction of ICD-10 for coding cause of death in 2001 means that the number of deaths for this year are not comparable with data for earlier years.

Research has shown that the Introduction of ICD-10 led to an apparent increase of 2.7 per cent. in the number of deaths coded to female breast cancer.

Rates for the years 1993 to 2000 have therefore been adjusted by 2.7 per cent. to produce comparable trends for this period.

Data for 1992 are not adjusted because of coding changes introduced in 1993.

[4] Rates for 2001 are based on mid-year population estimates produced following the 2001 Census.

Rates for earlier years are based on mid-year population estimates produced following the 1991 Census.

There is therefore a discontinuity in this time series. ONS will publish revised sub-national population estimates for 1991 to 2000 in February 2003.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on raising awareness of breast cancer since 1997; what progress has been made in cutting the number of deaths from breast cancer since 1997; and what care is available to people who suffer emotionally from the removal of a breast after treatment for breast cancer. [74406]

Ms Blears: We congratulate the charities that work together on breast cancer awareness month and their efforts to raise awareness of the disease. In addition to these efforts, the Government have spent approximately £10,000 on a breast awareness teaching kit for primary care in conjunction with the European Community and the cancer research campaign. £38,500 has also been spent nationally on "Be Breast Aware" leaflets and £131,000 on information leaflets for women about breast screening.

There has been a 6 per cent. reduction in deaths from breast cancer between 1997 and 2000. The annual numbers of deaths in England has decreased from 11,240 in 1997 to 10,609 in 2000. Over the same period the age standardised death rate for breast cancer has fallen by 7.7 per cent. from 1997 to 2000.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) is due to publish guidelines on supportive and palliative care in October 2002. This will include guidance on information, communication and psychological and social support. The NICE guidance is now available for consultation on the NICE website at www.nice.org.uk.

The Patient Cancer Survey 1999–2000 found that women with breast cancer reported generally positive experiences of breast cancer services.

Cancer

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received concerning the number of cancer patients awaiting radiotherapy treatment but not included on official NHS waiting lists. [75772]

Ms Blears: The Department has received a number of informal representations about waiting times for radiotherapy. In order to tackle radiotherapy waiting times, we are making unprecedented investment in new radiotherapy facilities, streamlining care processes through the cancer services collaborative and working to best utilise the current workforce and to increase the number of staff in post and in training.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received concerning the effectiveness of new systems for logging data relating to cancer treatment introduced under the NHS cancer plan; and if he will make a statement on these systems. [75784]

Ms Blears: No representations have been received. Monitoring the national health service cancer plan targets robustly and effectively requires the ability to track information across the patient pathway of care, from urgent general practitioner referral for suspected cancer, to their first definitive treatment. The Department, in collaboration with the NHS information authority, is developing a national database so that this data can be collated nationally and locally. The database is currently undergoing user testing in the NHS prior to general introduction.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the waiting list for breast cancer was for each month since September 2002; and how many breast cancer patients were tested to ascertain their suitability for a NICE-approved treatment for each of these months; [75796]

(2) what the waiting lists for breast cancer were for each month since September 2000; and how many (a) prostrate, (b) ovarian and (c) lung cancer patients were tested to ascertain their suitability for a NICE-approved treatment in each of these months; [75797]

(3) what the waiting lists for breast cancer were for each month since September 2000; and how many leukaemia patients were tested to ascertain their suitability for a NICE-approved treatment in each of these months. [75798]

Ms Blears: Data on waiting lists for breast, leukaemia, prostate, ovarian and lung cancer for each month since September 2000 are not collected centrally.

The cancer plan sets out waiting times targets for cancer treatment that will be implemented over the next five years. By 2005, all cancer patients will wait a maximum of one month from diagnosis to treatment and a maximum of two months from urgent general practitioner referral to treatment. We are currently developing systems to monitor performance against this target.

In addition, a new target of one month from diagnosis to first treatment for breast cancer was introduced in December 2001. Central monitoring of performance against this target began in January 2002 with data being collected quarterly. The table shows quarterly performance against this target.

Breast cancer one month from diagnosis to treatment

	Percentage
Quarter 4 2001–02	94.2
Quarter 1 2002–03	94.4

The Department does not collect information about the suitability of patients for specific treatments. The responsibility for arranging tests and deciding what treatment is best for the patient rests with the clinicians concerned. This is done in consultation with the patient and is informed by the patient's clinical history. Relevant guidance from the National Institute of Clinical Excellence would also be taken into account. Discussions between patients and clinicians about suitable treatments are confidential.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the number of people diagnosed with lung cancer since 1992; and how this compares with other (a) Commonwealth and (b) EU countries; [75834]

(2) what assessment he has made of the number of people diagnosed with leukaemia since 1992; and how this compares with other (a) Commonwealth and (b) EU countries; [75832]

(3) what assessment he has made of the number of people diagnosed with (a) breast cancer, (b) ovarian cancer, (c) leukaemia, (d) prostate cancer and (e) lung cancer since 1992; and how this compares with other (i) Commonwealth and (ii) EU countries; [75831]

(4) what assessment he has made of the number of people diagnosed with prostate cancer since 1992; and how this compares with other (a) Commonwealth and (b) EU countries. [75833]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply. The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Gregory Barker, dated 28 October 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent questions concerning what assessment has made of the number of people diagnosed with various types of cancer since 1992; and how these figures compares with other (i) Commonwealth and (ii) EU countries. (75831,75832, 75833, 75834).

Figures on the numbers of people diagnosed with cancers of the breast, lung, ovary and prostate, and leukaemia in the EU countries can be found on the EUCAN database. This database contains information for the latest year for which cancer incidence, mortality and population data are available in the 15 Member States of the European Union; at present the latest data available are for 1997. The EUCAN database is available on the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) website at:

Comparable data for the Commonwealth countries can be found on the GLOBOCAN database. The GLOBOCAN 2000 database contains estimates of cancer incidence, mortality and prevalence worldwide for 2000. The GLOBOCAN 2000 database is also available on the IARC website (at the same address).

Figures for the UK are included on both of these databases in the format which allows comparison with other countries.

Cancer Care

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the component parts of the national cancer waiting lists as published by the NHS. [75769]

Ms Blears: The NHS cancer plan set out new goals to reduce waiting times for cancer treatment. The ultimate goal is that no one should wait longer than one month from an urgent general practitioner referral for suspected cancer to the beginning of treatment except for a good clinical reason or through patient choice.

The first step in reducing cancer waiting times was the introduction of the two week waiting time standard from urgent general practitioner (GP) referral to out-patient appointment for cases of suspected breast cancer from April 1999. The two week standard was extended to all other urgent cases of suspected cancer during 2000.

From December 2001 targets of a one month maximum wait from diagnosis to first treatment for breast cancer and a one month maximum wait from urgent general practitioner referral to first treatment for children's cancers, testicular cancer and acute leukaemia were introduced. By 2005 the target of a maximum two month wait from urgent GP referral to first treatment and a one-month wait from diagnosis to first treatment for will cover all cancers.

Existing monitoring arrangements cover the two week standard and the December 2001 targets.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received concerning its target to introduce 1,000 new cancer consultants to the NHS by 2006. [75781]

Ms Blears: The Department has received a number of informal representations about the expansion of the cancer workforce. The national cancer director works closely with cancer networks, professional organisations and workforce development confederations to ensure that national decisions about workforce planning reflect the needs of the service. The table shows good progress in increasing the number of doctors working in cancer services. This increase means the national health service is on track to hit the target set out in the cancer plan of nearly 1,000 extra cancer consultants by 2006.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations his Department has received concerning the transparency of cancer fund allocation within NHS health authorities in England and Wales; [75804]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to ensure greater transparency on how public money for cancer is spent; [75775]

(3) what procedures are in place to ensure that funds awarded for cancer services within NHS health authorities in England and Wales are distributed accordingly and not allocated to other areas of health care. [75805]

Ms Blears: The Department and the national cancer director, Professor Mike Richards, have received both formal and informal representations about cancer funding from national health service and voluntary organisations as well as individual clinicians and managers providing cancer care. Professor Richards is working with chief executives of strategic health authorities to ensure that the money gets through to cancer services and that cancer plan targets are met.

We are devolving power from the centre to locally run services, to allow the freedom to innovate and improve care for patients. The increased resources that we have made available and will continue to make available to support the implementation of the cancer plan will move to the NHS frontline. Primary care trusts will have freedom to decide where NHS resources are best spent, but they will need to account publicly for how they have used resources against the test of high clinical standards and good value for money.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received concerning the effectiveness of the peer review teams introduced under the NHS Cancer Plan. [75783]

Ms Blears: The Department has received a number of informal comments about the 2000–01 peer review process. A formal evaluation of the peer review process has been commissioned. Decisions about the future of the process will take all these views into consideration.

Cardiac Surgery

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to primary care trusts to allow patients waiting for cardiac surgery to be treated out of their area in (a) the UK and (b) abroad. [76244]

Ms Blears: The following guidance on domestic and overseas treatment has been issued to primary care trusts:

Extending Choice for Patients—Establishing the Heart Surgery Scheme (March 2002)

Further Advice and Guidance (April 2002)

Additional Revenue Allocations (April 2002)

Update and Next Steps (June 2002)

Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Library.

Departmental Websites

Dr. Vincent Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the web site links associated with his Department, including sites now dormant or closed, and indicating whether they are live, dormant or closed; what the start up costs were for each site listed; what the operating costs were in each year since start up for each site; which company hosted each site; what assessment takes place for each site; which company does the assessment; if he will place the assessment reports in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [75584]

Ms Blears: A list of websites associated with the Department has been placed in the Library.

There would be a disproportionate cost associated with identifying the start up costs, the hosting arrangements and what assessment takes place for each site listed. However,we are able to provide the operating costs for all the websites hosted by the Department. These are shown in the table:

Financial Year	Hosting and maintenance (£k)	Estimated staff costs (£k)	(£k)
1998–99	20.9	178.9	199.8
1999–00	54.3	229.4	283.7
2000–01	49.3	277.1	326.4
2001–02	73.3	339.7	400.8
2002–03 (to 30.09.02)	57.5	169.8	227.3

The current hosting supplier is EDS Ltd. The Office of Government Commerce provided hosting until the end of June 2002. EDS provide a monthly service report which includes a web performance return.

Domiciliary Oxygen Service

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he intends to publish the review of the Domiciliary Oxygen Service; [75943]

(2) whether he intends to accept the recommendations of the Royal College of Physicians made in their 1999 guidance Domiciliary Oxygen Therapy Services; [75944]

(3) what analysis has been undertaken of the benefits of liquid oxygen to those with respiratory problems; and if he will introduce a three modality system of oxygen supply for such patients. [75945]

Mr. Lammy: The review of the domiciliary oxygen service has not yet been concluded. There are no plans at present to change the arrangements under which oxygen is provided for patients who need it. The therapeutic benefits of oxygen do not depend on the modality of oxygen supply.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many people died in 2001 while on the waiting list for heart surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Ms Blears [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The information requested is not collected centrally. [75944]

Drug Misuse

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out for each of the last five years the amount of expenditure on preventative measures to tackle the misuse of (a) alcohol, (b) tobacco, (c) cannabis, (d) ecstasy, (e) amphetamines, (f) LSD, (g) heroin, (h) cocaine and (i) crack cocaine. [75736]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 October 2002]: Most of the work on the prevention of alcohol misuse is undertaken at local level by National Health Service (NHS) health promotion units and primary health care professionals such as general practitioners and practice nurses. It is not possible to separately identify the funds devoted to this alcohol misuse prevention work. Over the period 1999–2003 a total of £76 million will have been invested in the NHS smoking cessation services. Actual spending on the public education campaign is £46 million with £13 million committed for 2002–03.

It should be noted that figures listed below for the years after 1998 when the Government's drug strategy was launched are a Department of Health contribution to overall prevention funding. Other Government Departments, in particular the Home Office and the Department for Education and Skills, also provide substantial funding.

1998/99	Around 1 .5m made available for national campaigns
1 999/00	Around 1 .5m made available for national campaigns
2000/01	Around 1 .5m made available for national campaigns
2001/02	Around 1 .5m made available for national campaigns. In addition 11 .164m ring fenced money for drug prevention spent.
2002/03	Around 1 .5m made available for national campaigns. In addition 15. 75m ring fenced money for drug prevention allocated.

Prior to 2001–02, drug prevention funding was not ring fenced. However health and local authorities could use mainstreamed funds to finance drug prevention.

GP Czar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many visits the GP Czar has made to Portsmouth South; and if he will make a statement. [76505]

Mr. Hutton: Professor David Colin-Thome is the national clinical director of primary care for England as well as a practising general practitioner.

He has not visited Portsmouth South during his time in office, nor been invited to do so.

Haemophilia

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to make a decision before the end of 2002 on whether to make recombinant available to all people with haemophilia. [75866]

Ms Blears: We hope to announce our decision on the availability of recombinant before the end of 2002.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent further consideration he has given to making recombinant clotting factors available to all haemophilia patients in England. [76827]

Ms Blears: The Government is still considering whether to make recombinant clotting factors available to all haemophiliacs in England taking full account of representations made by the All Party Parliamentary Group on haemophilia, the haemophilia society, the United Kingdom haemophilia centre doctors organisation and others. We hope to announce our decision before the end of 2002.

Health Care (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the 2002–03 budget was (a) finalised and (b) published for the (i) Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust and (ii) Portsmouth City Primary Care Trust; and if he will make a statement; [76504]

(2) what plans he has to bring an end to the Portsmouth Hospitals NHS trust deficit; and if he will make a statement. [76497]

Ms Blears: The management of the trust is a matter for the local health community managing within the context of "Shifting the Balance of Power", local partnership and agreement. Work is under way across the whole health economy to identify recurrent solutions to address the deficit.

I am advised by Hampshire and Isle of Wight Strategic Health Authority that the Portsmouth Hospitals National Health Service Trust board approved initial budgets for 2002–03 at its meeting on 25 April 2002. There were a number of areas of service development that required additional investment, which have been agreed in the last two months. In the case of Portsmouth City Primary Care Trust, the outline budget was presented to its board at a public meeting in June.

The public release of details of the proposed budget and the subsequent publication of audited accounts are matters for each individual organisation to determine.

Meat and Poultry

Mr. David Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Government's planned expenditure is on training in the meat and poultry sectors in (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04 and (c) 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [74734]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 15 October 2002]: I have been asked to reply.

The Learning and Skills Council (LSC) funds generic training leading to a national qualification. While there is a small volume of LSC-supported vocational training for new entrants to the meat and poultry sector, it is likely that the bulk of training in this sector will be in-service and not supported by the LSC.

Sector Skills Councils, which are replacing National Training Organisations, have a responsibility to work with employers to identify training needs and ways of meeting them. Lantra has been designated as a trailblazer sector skills council covering environmental and land-based industries, including agricultural production. Lantra receives some financial support from Defra and DfES, though it will principally be for industry sectors to generate funds for training. The meat and poultry sectors will also benefit from publicly-funded services, such as Defra's Farm Business Advice Service.

The Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC) a Defra non-departmental public body (NDPB), funded by statutory levy, has the general duty of promoting greater efficiency in the livestock industry and the livestock products industry, and other functions which include:

1. In sections of the livestock industry or livestock products industry for which no industrial training board has been established, encouraging and promoting the training of employees

2. Co-operating with the industrial training board for any other sector of either industry in the improvement of the training of employees in that section of the industry. (Agriculture Act 1967, Schedule 1, paragraph 17)

The MLC therefore fund training in the red meat sector, both directly and through support to the Meat Training Council (formerly a national training organisation), discussions are under way regarding its possible inclusion in a larger food and drink SSC). The MLC planned expenditure on training during the periods in question is:

2002–03	160,000 (forecast)
2003–04	175,000 (indicative)
2004–05	200,000 (indicative)

Mental Health

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the annual expenditure per person under the age of 18 on mental health services in (a) England, (b) each NHS region and (c) each health authority in each of the last six years. [75633]

Jacqui Smith: The requested information is not collected.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to reduce delays in obtaining NICE guidance for cancer treatments. [75800]

Ms Blears: When the Department becomes aware of an impending licence for a significant new cancer treatment it is considered for referral to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE). The appraisal process takes a minimum of 54 weeks from referral to completion as it has been designed to allow the full participation of patients, clinicians, companies and stakeholders. NICE is fully aware of the need to ensure that the process is as streamlined as possible, without losing any of the important safeguards it contains, in order to publish guidance soon after the treatments are launched.

Physical Activity Levels

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department is doing to encourage improved health and preventative health programmes through increased physical activity. [75208]

Ms Blears: The Government recognises the importance of physical activity to improving health and has set up a programme of activity to increase rates of physical activity. Together with the Countryside Agency and Sport England, the Department is developing a programme of local exercise action pilots (LEAPs), which will test out different community approaches to increasing physical activity. The results will inform and lead action on physical activity across the National Health service.

Local strategies to increase physical activity are being developed as part of the national service framework for coronary heart disease. To support the development of local physical activity programmes, the Department published a national quality assurance framework for exercise referral systems in April 2001. This offers guidance to primary care and fitness professionals who work together to offer tailored exercise programmes to patients whose health would benefit from increased exercise.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has considered the case for primary care trusts having physical activity co-ordinators within their public health teams. [75209]

Ms Blears: The issue of whether Primary Care Trusts (PCTs) should appoint physical activity co-ordinators as part of their public health teams is a matter for local determination. However, what is clear is that PCTs have a role in delivering improvements to public health, including increasing rates of physical activity. In order to assist PCTs in this, together with the Countryside Agency and Sport England, the Department is developing a programme of local exercise action pilots (LEAPs) to test out different approaches to increasing physical activity.

This programme will fund one pilot in each of the nine regions in England. Pilots will be led by PCTs and based in neighbourhood renewal areas and some will also involve sport action zones. The ongoing results will inform and lead action on physical activity across the National Health Service.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has considered the case for a cross departmental strategy at national, regional and local level for joined-up action and funding to improve physical activity levels. [75210]

Ms Blears: The Government recognises the importance of a strategic approach in order to increase rates of physical activity. This Department works closely with other Government Departments to ensure that policy initiatives on health, sport and recreation, education and transport are co-ordinated and contribute to our shared goal of increasing access and rates of physical activity. This has been backed up by significant investment, including £581 million from the new opportunities fund for a physical education and sports programme, £459 million to transform physical education, school sport and club links over the next three years and £2.5 million for a new programme of local exercise action pilots, led by primary care trusts (PCTs).

At a national level, Ministers from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, Department for Education and Skills and the Department of Health have regular monthly meetings to ensure joint working and co-ordination on issues relating to physical activity and sport. The Department of Health has also set up a national alliance on physical activity that draws together policy makers, experts and practitioners to share local experiences and learning on strategies, plans and practices to increase physical activity.

At a regional level the positioning of regional directors of public health and their teams in the Government offices of the regions provides a very real opportunity to make connections across policy areas that will support increased physical activity.

Locally, PCTs have a key responsibility for ensuring that a strategic approach is taken to increasing physical activity through their involvement in local strategic partnerships.

Pneumococcal Polysaccharide Vaccine

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on prescribing the pneumococcal polysaccharide vaccine in each of the last three years, broken down by NHS trust; and if he will make a statement. [76008]

Ms Blears: Information on the net ingredient cost of pneumococcal vaccines prescribed in general practitioners practices in England, by Health Authority, 2000 and 2001 has been placed in the Library.

Data is taken from the prescribing analyses and cost system from the prescription pricing authority and only available by health authority.

Post-Surgery Radiotherapy

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time for post-surgery radiotherapy in (a) Southampton Hospital and (b) the nearest three units which provide similar services has been in the last year for which figures are available; what clinical guidance is on such waiting times; and if he will make a statement. [76742]

Ms Blears: The information requested on waiting times for post surgery radiotherapy is not collected centrally.

The NHS Cancer Plan sets out new goals to reduce waiting times for diagnosis and treatment. The ultimate goal is that no one should wait longer than one month from an urgent referral for suspected cancer to the beginning of treatment, except for a good clinical reason or through patient choice. In order to tackle radiotherapy waiting times we are making unprecedented investment in new radiotherapy facilities, streamlining care processes through the cancer services collaborative and working to best utilise the current workforce and to increase the number of staff in post and in training.

Palliative Care

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations his Department has received concerning the success of the 'education and support programme for district and community nurses in the principles and practice of palliative care; [75808]

(2) how many proposals have been received for the 'education and support programme for district and community nurses in the principles and practice of palliative care'; and what the source of these proposals was. [75809]

Ms Blears: Funding of £6 million over three years has been made available to train and support district and community nurses in the principles and practice of palliative care. Bids were invited in April 2001 with one project from each cancer network being chosen. The projects were required to reflect collaboration between education provider*(s)*; training recipients; specialist palliative healthcare professionals; and education consortia/confederations and demonstrate a multi-professional approach to the training provision. Details of the projects can be found on the web at www.doh.gov/cancer/edusup.htm

We are in the second year of the programme. All reports received so far suggest that the project is proving beneficial and is being well received by district and community nurses. The project will be evaluated.

Prostate Cancer

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a full review will be published on current progress in implementing the Government Prostate Cancer Programme issued in December 2000. [75807]

Ms Blears: Good progress has been made since the national health service prostate cancer programme was published on 6 September 2000. All targets within the programme have been achieved, and the planned increase in consultant urologists is currently being exceeded.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from (a) Public Health Laboratory Service Management and (b) trades unions concerning (i) the transfer of local public health laboratories from Public Health Laboratory Service central organisation to hospital trusts; and (ii) the timing of implementation of the transfer; and if he will make a statement. [74807]

Ms Blears: A discussion document on the proposals was issued in June 2002, and representations were received from the PHLS Board and from Amicus and the British Medical Association on both the detail of the proposals and on the proposed timing. We sought to address issues raised in the final decisions about which laboratories would transfer to the NHS from 1 April 2003. This was announced on 3 September. Representations have since been received from Unison.

Radioactive Xenon Gas

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what experiments have been conducted using the release of radioactive xenon gas from Harwell Atomic Energy Research Laboratories. [75688]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

I understand from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority that a short series of tests using mildly radioactive xenon gas were carried out in April 1961, in order to improve the understanding of weather conditions on the dispersal of airborne materials.

Radiographers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has had with the Health Professions Council regarding the increase in the retention fee for radiographers; and if he will make a statement. [76015]

Mr. Hutton: [Holding reply issued on Monday 21 October]: The Health Professions Council (HPC) ended a three month public consultation exercise on 30 September 2002. One of the issues for consultation was the level at which the HPC should set its fees from April 2003. The Department provided a consolidated response to the consultation of which the issue of the level of fees formed part. The HPC will analyse the feedback it has received and produce a document summarising the replies, which they aim to publish in November.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people have been waiting more than (a) six, (b) 12 and (c) 18 months for radiotherapy treatment in each English health authority area; [76036]

(2) whether waiting times for radiotherapy are reported as part of the waiting times for (a) inpatients and (b) outpatients; and if he will make a statement. [75992]

Ms Blears [holding answers 24 October 2002]: Waiting times for radiotherapy treatment are not collected centrally. In order to tackle radiotherapy waiting times, we are making unprecedented investment in new radiotherapy facilities, streamlining care processes through the cancer services collaborative and working to best utilise the current workforce and to increase the number of staff in post and in training.

Renal Services (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received the South East Health Board Review Panel's analysis of and recommendations for the Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust Renal Services; and if he will make a statement. [76005]

Ms Blears: Officials of the Department's directorate of health and social care for the south of England have received the report on Portsmouth renal services by the external review panel, commissioned by the regional director of public health for the south east. In response to the report Portsmouth hospitals national health service trust has produced a detailed action plan. Progress against it is being closely monitored by the Hampshire and Isle of Wight health strategic health authority and the directorate of health and social care (south).

Salisbury Alcohol and Drugs Advisory Service

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial position of the Salisbury Alcohol and Drugs Advisory Service; and what the waiting time is for an appointment. [72615]

Ms Blears [holding answer 15 October 2002]: I understand that an additional £60,000 has been made available to Salisbury alcohol and drugs advisory service (SADAS) in recognition of the shortfall in the original allocation for 2002–03. This will enable the strengthening of staffing resources, which will allow them to improve all their services, including detoxification, capacity and structured day care provision.

SADAS is taking part in the combined national treatment agency and modernisation agency waiting times pilot. The current waiting times being reported by SADAS are shown in the table.

	Waiting times
Highest priority cases	1–2 weeks
Treatment for under 25 year olds	Up to 8 weeks
Arrest referral	Up to 12 weeks
Low risk	Up to 52 weeks

It should be noted that the figures above measure the time from referral to treatment, and not from the first appointment, which may have occurred at an earlier date.

Smallpox Vaccine

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he estimates it would cost clinically to test the smallpox vaccine to be supplied by Powderject. [67542]

Mr. Hutton: The Government have made no estimate of the cost of clinical trials for this vaccine, as the costs of any such trials normally fall to the supplying company.

There are currently no proposals for clinical trials of this vaccine in the United Kingdom, and the Government are not meeting any costs for any future limited clinical trials that might be required in fulfilment of an application for a product licence for smallpox vaccine supplied by Powderject Pharmaceuticals.

Since smallpox does not currently exist in the population, trials of protective efficacy are not possible. Therefore, the likely protective efficacy of a new smallpox vaccine must be inferred from other parameters. Clinical trials are not mandatory for unlicensed vaccines.

The National Institute for Biological Standards and Control are conducting independent potency and quality checks on the new vaccine prior to the vaccine being finally accepted.

Smoking

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the percentage smoking rates in each year since 1990 in (a) England and (b) each NHS region for (i) all adults, (ii) non-manual groups and (iii) manual groups. [75640]

Ms Blears: Information on smoking prevalence for adults is obtained from the general household survey; questions on smoking were included every two years. The most recent results are for 2000. Information on smoking prevalence in non-manual and manual groups is not readily available by region; sample sizes for some regions are relatively small and would not be very robust. The available information is given in the tables.

[1] From 2000, ONS have weighted the data to compensate for under-representation of people in some groups (for example young men). The 2000 results are provided based on weighted data only. The results based on weighted and unweighted data are not directly comparable, so the results for 1998 have been presented as weighted, and as unweighted data.

Note:

In this table, the non-manual social-economic group category includes professionals, employers and managers, and intermediate non-manual and junior non-manual workers. The manual social-economic group category includes skilled manual (including foreman and supervisors) and own account non-professional, semi-skilled manual and personal service, and unskilled manual workers.

Suicide

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the data available on death rates from (a) suicide and (b) undetermined injury in each year since 1996. [75641]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply. The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Dr. Evan Harris, dated 28 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your enquiry about the publication of death rates from (a) suicide and (b) undetermined injury in each year since 1996. (75641)

These data were published in Table 3 of Mortality Statistics from injury and poisoning 2000, Series DH4 no. 25 which is available on the National Statistics website at hhttp://www.statistics.gov.uk/downloads/theme—health/DH4—NO25/DH4—No25.pdf.

Heart Surgery Waiting Lists

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died in 2001 while on the waiting list for heart surgery; and if he will make a statement. [75994]

Ms Blears [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Waiting Times

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether (a) CT scans and (b) MRI scans are included in figures for (i) in-patient and (ii) out-patient waiting times; and if he will make a statement. [75986]

Ms Blears: [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Information on computerised tomography (CT) scans and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scans is not collected centrally. Waiting times for consultant-led in-patient elective admissions and consultant-led first out-patient appointments, following general practitioner referral, are collected on the consultant's main specialty not by procedure. CT scans and MRI scans will be included in the figures if they take place as an elective in-patient admission or as a first out-patient appointment, but will not be separately identifiable.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are waiting for a neuro-physiology (a) diagnostic test and (b) consultant appointment at (i) Musgrove Park Hospital, Taunton and (ii) Yeovil District Hospital; how many of these have waited more than (A) three, (B) six, (C) nine, (D) 12, (E) 15, (F) 18 and (G) 24 months; and if he will make a statement. [75990]

Ms Blears: [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Information is not collected centrally on the number of patients waiting for diagnostic tests and consultant appointments.

Information is collected on waiting times for first out-patient appointment for clinical neuro-physiology consultant specialty. There are no data held centrally for Taunton and Somerset National Health Service Trust for this specialty. For East Somerset NHS Trust there were no patients waiting over 13 weeks as at 30 June 2002, the most recent date for which information is available .

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in each NHS Trust have been waiting more than (a) six, (b) 12, (c) 18 and (d) 24 months for (i) CT and (ii) MRI scans; and if he will make a statement. [75991]

Ms Blears [holding answer 24 October 2000]: Information on waiting times for magnetic resource imaging (MRI) scans is not collected centrally. The length of time that a patient may have to wait for any scan is dependent on their clinical condition. Emergency cases need to be seen immediately. Other cases will be carried out as quickly as possible, however this is dependent on the clinical priority of all the remaining patients waiting to be scanned. To increase the capacity of diagnostic services, we are making unprecedented investment for the provision of new and replacement scanners. By 2004, 88 new MRI scanners and 186 new computed tomography (CT) scanners will have been delivered through central purchasing initiatives. In addition to this, workforce initiatives are underway that aim to improve recruitment and retention of staff and we are streamlining the way care is delivered through the cancer services collaborative.

Welfare Food Scheme

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the plans to reform the welfare food scheme to help ensure children from poorer families have a healthier start in life. [78310]

Ms Blears: We have today published proposals to reform the welfare food scheme under the title Healthy Start.

The welfare food scheme has done great service for the last 60 years in providing milk and vitamins, primarily to expectant and nursing mothers, babies and children under five years of age in low income families. In line with our commitment in The NHS Plan, we are seeking to bring the scheme up to date in line with the latest expert advice on nutrition. Our proposals for this £142 million scheme will broaden the nutritional base of the scheme and offer a wider choice to families. We propose to do this through the introduction of a fixed face value voucher that can be exchanged for fruit and vegetables, cereal based foods, other foods suitable for weaning, as well as milk and infant formula. We are also proposing to link the scheme more closely with the NHS through antenatal and post-natal clinics. The new scheme will provide a healthier start for children from poorer families and link with our wider efforts to tackle health inequalities, and improve nutrition and food access.

We are already working with the devolved administrations and actively seeking the views of interested parties and stakeholders on these proposals, including the users of the scheme, health professionals, the food and dairy industry and small firms. This consultation will run until 13 December.

Copies of the Healthy Start document are available in the Library and on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/healthystart.

DEFENCE

Anti-tank Missiles

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 16 October 2002, ref: 73313, what steps he will take to find the anti-tank missiles lost in the Bristol Channel. [76178]

Dr. Moonie: Two extensive searches of the range have failed to locate the lost pallet of munitions that contained the anti-tank missiles. The most recent of these was conducted between 7 and 11 October 2002 by a six-strong team from the Royal Navy Southern Diving Group. A report into the findings of this latest search is currently being prepared and its findings will determine the Ministry of Defence's next steps.

C41STAR

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the value of the contracts for the two studies awarded to Logica and BAE Systems for the C41STAR is; and if he will make a statement. [76794]

Dr. Moonie: The C4ISTAR contracts awarded in August and September 2002 to Logica and BAE Systems each have a maximum value of £700,000.

Condoms

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many condoms have been purchased by his Department for non-medical purposes in each of the last five years; and what his Department's planned requirement is for each of the next five years. [77372]

Dr. Moonie: Condoms are not purchased for non-medical purposes. The Ministry of Defence purchases condoms for medical use. They are supplied to service personnel for the prevention of transmission of sexually transmitted diseases and as a form of contraception.

Department Job Vacancies

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many job vacancies there were at (a) administrative assistant or equivalent, (b) administrative officer or equivalent, (c) administrative executive officer, (d) higher executive officer, (e) senior executive officer, (f) grade 7 principal, and (g) all positions above grade 7 level in his Department for jobs located in (i) London and (ii) the south east between 1 April and 31 March 2001; and what is the total employment for each Civil Service grade. [76564]

Dr. Moonie: Information on the number of job vacancies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The available information is given in the table, showing the position as at April 2001.

Note:

A breakdown by grade equivalence is no longer available for Trading Fund staff and will include staff previously classed as Industrial.

Employment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 1 February 2002, Official Report, column 596W, what the total area in square feet of all empty properties owned by (a) his Department, (b) his agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he has responsibility was in each year since May 1997 [37917]

Dr. Moonie: Other than information held concerning the dimension of offices within the Ministry of Defence, no central records are presently maintained about the size of empty properties owned by the Department, or agencies or public bodies for which I am responsible. Information on such statistics could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers were employed (i) full-time, (ii) part-time and (iii) on a contract basis by his Department in each year since 1992. (6937)

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 21 November 2001, Official Report, column 340, by my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie).

Information about the number of press officers working in the Ministry of Defence Press Office for the period form 1996–97 to 1998–99 is contained in Appendix 10 of the Report on the Government Information and Communication Service by the Public Administration Select Committee dated 29 July 1998. Copies of the report are available in the Libraries of the House. The number of press officers employed in the Department's Corporate Commissions division Headquarters Press Office during the financial years 1999–2000 and 2000–01 was 13 and 25 respectively. The difference in the figures relates to staff turnover throughout the year. In addition, the Defence Agencies, the Permanent Joint Headquarters, and the single Service Commands and units also employ personnel with a press officer function, some as a secondary task to their main roles. Accurate information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Eurofighter

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects delivery of the first tranche of 55 Eurofighters to be complete. [76359]

Dr. Moonie: Delivery of the first tranche of 55 Typhoons (formerly known as Eurofighter) for the Royal Air Force is expected to be completed by the end of 2005.

Focus Groups

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use he and his Department has made of focus group research since June 2001; if he will identify for each research project the topics covered, the person or organisation carrying out the research, and the total cost; and if he will publish the research on his Department's website. [74999]

Dr. Moonie : Focus group research is undertaken by various organisations and agencies of the Ministry of Defence. Information is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, the Directorate General of Corporate Communications (DGCC) carries out corporate research on behalf of the Department as a whole. Since June 2001 DGCC has let two focus group research contracts: one with Colquhoun Associates to better understand the public reaction to the events of 11 September 2001 as part of our work on theNew Chapter to the Strategic Defence Review; and the other conducted by internal staff supported by Independent Field Work Company to look into the public image of the MOD.

I am withholding the value of each of these contracts as the information is protected in accordance with Exemption 13 [third party's commercial confidences] of the Code of Practice on access to Government information. However the total cost of the two contacts was around £34,000 including VAT. Focus Group research is an important management tool, and we do not routinely publish the reports on the MOD website. However we consider all requests for disclosure on a case by case basis.

HMS Nottingham

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost of the heavy-lift recovery of HMS Nottingham from Australia to the UK will be; where HMS Nottingham will be repaired in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [76341]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 October 2002, Official Report, column 143W, to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock).

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to repair HMS Nottingham on her return to the UK; and if he will make a statement. [77082]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 22 October 2002, Official Report, column 143W, to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock).

Initiatives

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the schemes and initiatives sponsored by his Department and its agencies which are not the subject of national roll out, showing (a) the authorities or areas covered by the scheme and (b) the budget of the scheme in the last year for which information is available. [75668]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has two central schemes, which have not been subject to a national roll out. In the last academic year the Department rolled out its Skill Force programme to 11 pilot locations: Ashfield (Nottinghamshire), Birmingham, Bristol, Great Yarmouth (Norfolk), Knowsley (Merseyside), North Lanarkshire, Leicester, Rochdale, Newcastle, West Norfolk, Islington (London). The budget for the Skill Force programme was approximately £1 million funded by the Treasury's Invest to Save Budget, Ministry of Defence and co-funding from local partner organisations. The initiative is expanding to 23 schemes with a start date of November 2002. This expansion is being co-funded by the DfES and Welsh Assembly.

The Army Cadet 'Outreach' programme is being undertaken by 25 counties within the UK: Berkshire, Bristol, Bucks, Cheshire, Cleveland, Dorset, Durham, Dyfed, Essex, Glamorgan, Gloucestershire, Gwent, Hampshire, Kent, Middlesex, Northumbria, Oxfordshire, Powys, Surrey, Yorkshire, Perthshire, Lancashire, Hertfordshire, Leicestershire, and Wiltshire. The cost for this programme is some £150,000.

The Ministry of Defence has a number of other schemes/initiatives, which have not been rolled out nation wide. such as Ministry of Defence base specific conservation projects. However, details of these types of scheme are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his best estimate of the annual production capacity of chemical weapon agents at the al-Muthanna establishment in Iraq in 1991. [75825]

Mr. Hoon: According to information supplied to the United Nations by Iraq the annual production capacity of the al-Muthanna site in Iraq in 1991 was 4,000 tonnes of chemical weapon agents per annum. This is indicative of the large scale of Iraq's chemical weapons programme at that time.

We assess that the capacity of this production site could have been higher if Iraq had reduced the wastage rates at the site.

Job Advertisements

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many posts were advertised in the press in each year since June 1999; and what percentage of them were advertised in the Scottish press. [76856]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 24 October 2002]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Medical Reservists

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) regular service personnel and (b) reservists there are in the medical establishment in the British armed forces. [74651]

Dr Moonie: As at 1 July 2002, there were 6,489 personnel in the regular Defence Medical Sendees. This figures excludes student nurses and other new entry trainees.

As at September 2002, there were 4,829 medical and associated support personnel in the volunteer reserve forces.

MOD Salaries

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the salary costs of Ministry of Defence civilian personnel in each of the past four years; and what are the projected costs over the next four years. [76355]

Dr. Moonie: The amount spent by the Ministry of Defence on the salary costs of civilian personnel over the past four years is (in outturn prices):

1998–99	2,224
1999–2000	2,259
2000–01	2,267

The latest forecast for civilian salary costs for 2002–03 is £2,328 million.

Decisions on the allocation of the defence budget over the following four years will be made in the normal way through the MOD's annual planning process. I am therefore withholding this information under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Operation Antler

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of Operation Antler into the activities of scientists at Porton Down. [74919]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 29 April 2002, Official Report, column 609W.

I gave an update on progress to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury on 29 April 2002, Official Report, column 609W.

I am advised by Wiltshire constabulary that the inquiry, Operation Antler, is still ongoing and it would not be appropriate for a statement to be made at this time.

Operation Saif Sareea

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what lessons he has learned from Operation Saif Sareea for the likely requirement for (a) additional medical personnel and (b) medical reservists to meet the UK's military commitments in 2002–03. [74645]

Dr. Moonie: Medical personnel were deployed on Exercise SAIF SAREEA II solely to provide medical support to the deployed troops. It was not intended that they should participate as part of the exercise and therefore medical facilities were not scaled to cope with casualties that could arise from an actual operation. The Ministry of Defence is satisfied that it will be able to meet its military commitments through the use of Regular medical personnel and medical reserves.

Pay Audit

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the pay settlement awarded to the non-industrial sector at his Department; and if he will make a statement. [77041]

Dr. Moonie: I have received eight letters on this issue. The Ministry of Defences' decision to implement the 2002 pay offer followed ballots by the three unions concerned in which a majority of votes cast were in favour of the deal. The award introduces new pay arrangements from August 2002, including bonuses to reward the best performers for their contribution to Ministry of Defence business during the year. Similar arrangements are being introduced for industrial staff following a separate ballot which also produced a majority in favour of acceptance.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to conduct a pay audit on the non-industrial staff of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [77042]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence is conducting an equal pay review of its civilian pay systems and will prepare an appropriate action plan by April 2003. All Government Departments are going through this process, in line with Cabinet Office guidance. The work is being taken forward in full consultation with, and the involvement of, the trades unions.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the in-service date is for the Photo Reconnaissance Imagery Strike Module Improved Date Modem; and if he will make a statement. [75998]

Dr. Moonie: The programme to fit the Photo Reconnaissance Imagery Strike Module enabled Improved Data Modem (PRISM IDM) to Jaguar aircraft is continuing. The IDM entered service in September 2002, enabling the transmission of data over conventional voice radio links. PRISM offers additional capability and will enter service once other planned enhancements to the aircraft, upon which it depends, have been realised. Work on these enhancements is in hand.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the contract for the photo reconnaissance imagery strike module data modem by QinetiQ is worth and if he will make a statement. [76796]

Dr. Moonie : The total cost of procuring the photo reconnaissance imagery strike module enabled improved data modem for the Jaguar fleet was some £2.5 million. This figure included ground test equipment, documentation, engineering support and integration advice.

QinetiQ

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to report to Parliament on the final contractual terms and other arrangements for Carlyle Investments to become the strategic partner for QinetiQ. [77378]

Dr. Moonie: I informed Members at the beginning of September that we were about to enter a limited period of exclusive negotiations with Carlyle Financial Investments as our preferred bidder for partnering QinetiQ. These negotiations are currently well under way and, as we remain on target to complete the sale before the end of the year, I expect to be in a position to give the House details of the arrangements in the near future.

SA80 Rifle

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent findings of investigations into the effectiveness of the SA80. [77067]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 550W to the hon. Member for Leominster (Mr. Wiggin).

Suicide

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving armed forces personnel under 25 years of age have (a) attempted and (b) committed suicide in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [76624]

Dr. Moonie: We are unable to provide details of attempted suicide. Although data on all self-inflicted injuries are held at the relevant service casualty branches, information is not centrally held on whether the self-inflicted injury was attempted suicide.

Between 1 January 1997 and 31 December 2001 there have been 19 reported suicides by members of the regular armed forces under the age of 25. These figures are based on coroners' (or Procurator Fiscal in Scotland) verdicts of suicide and excludes self-inflicted deaths with: open verdicts, accidental deaths or deaths due to misadventure. Figures from 1999 onwards may change significantly as there are a number of verdicts outstanding. These figures are broken down by year in the table:

Year	Total
1998	2
1999	5
2000	3
2001	1
Grand Total	19

Tactical Tomahawk Missiles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what share of the contract to modify the next generation of Tactical Tomahawk missiles will be paid by the UK; and if he will make a statement. [76793]

Dr. Moonie: An equally funded United Kingdom–United States programme is in progress to develop and test a version of the Tactical Tomahawk Block IV missile capable of being fired from submarine torpedo tubes.

Territorial Army

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to allow members of the Territorial Army to become eligible for senior positions. [77068]

Dr. Moonie: Members of the Territorial Army already hold senior positions in the armed forces. There are currently two Territorial Army brigadier posts and one tri- service post open to one-star officers of all reserve forces. In addition, one TA officer currently holds local brigadier rank. I do not currently plan any changes to these arrangements.

Visits

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 October, Ref 36810, if he will give the (a) dates of the occasions, (b) countries visited and (c) parliamentary private secretaries involved. [76104]

Dr. Moonie: [holding answer 21 October 2002]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Date of travel	Country
30 November to 6 December 1998	Falkland Islands
1–2 December 1999	Germany
16 February 2000	France

The parliamentary private secretaries involved were those for the Minister for the Armed Forces and the Minister for Defence Procurement.

War Pensions

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he plans to make to war pensions. [76982]

Dr. Moonie: There are no plans to make changes to war pensions.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to allow war widows and widowers to keep their pensions on remarriage. [76983]

Dr. Moonie: There are no plans to allow war widows and widowers to keep their pensions on remarriage.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the recent settlement paid out to ex-service pensioners. [76985]

Dr. Moonie: Rates of war pensions are reviewed on an annual basis.

Website Links

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the website links associated with his Department, including sites now dormant or closed, and indicating whether they are live, dormant or closed; what the start up costs were for each site listed; what the operating costs were in each year since start up for each site; which company hosted each site; what assessment takes place for each site; which company does the assessment; if he will place the assessment reports in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [75587]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is, for the most part, not available centrally or in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Ministry of Defence has registered approximately 460 domain names under the mod.uk second-level domain. These are sub-delegated to numerous organisations within the MOD and armed forces. The MOD does not currently have a record of which are currently in use. A variety of other domain names (under gov.uk, org.uk etc) have also been registered locally, but no central register currently exists.

The MOD does not currently maintain a composite record of individual websites, costs, contractors and assessments. It would entail disproportionate cost to obtain these details for all of the locally managed websites that are operated by departmental organisations.

For the five central corporate websites of the MOD and the armed forces, all of which are live, the data are as follows. In the case of the MOD corporate website, the only metric available across all years is that of the number of hits (i.e. requests for files, including pages, images and others). For the remaining websites, the metric used is of page impressions (i.e. requests for pages only).

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Microcredit Summit

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development who will represent her Department at the Microcredit Summit + 5 being held in Washington from 10 to 13 November. [77359]

Clare Short: : DFID will be represented at the Summit by its Chief Enterprise Development Adviser, David Stanton. We have also invited funding applications to enable prospective participants from developing countries to attend the event.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Business Improvement District

Brian Cotter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of provisions to alter the voting majority relating to the proposed business improvement districts outlined in the draft Local Government Bill. [76829]

Mr. Raynsford: The Transport, Local Government and the Regions Select Committee recommended that a threshold of two thirds of the number of businesses eligible to vote should vote in favour before a Business Improvement District proposal proceeds. A number of other proposals were also made during the consultation on the draft Local Government Bill. We have considered all the proposals that have been made and will announce our conclusions shortly.

Detrunking

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what additional monies will pass to the (a) shire counties and (b) unitary authorities on detrunking. [76271]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

At the time responsibility for a road passes to a local authority (or very shortly after) it receives revenue funding for routine maintenance in the form of Special Grant under section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 and support for capital maintenance in the form of supplementary credit approvals. The value of this support is determined by a generalised engineering assessment, with allowance made for local factors such as type of road, level of traffic and the cost of winter maintenance.

Fire Facilities (East Sussex)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many emergency calls were responded to by the fire brigade in each of the last five years in (a) East Sussex and (b) Eastbourne. [77889]

Mr. Raynsford: The table contains information on incidents attended by East Sussex Fire Brigade for the last five years for which data are available. Incident data are not available below brigade area level.

Fire Fatalities

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many lives were lost due to fires in (a) East Sussex and (b) Eastbourne in each of the last 20 years. [77891]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table shows fatal casualties in fires attended by East Sussex Fire Brigade for the period 1982–2000. 2000 is the latest year for which data are available. Fire Service Cover

Mr. Heath: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what information he has (a) received and (b) requested from (i) chief fire officers and (ii) the Chief Inspector of Fire Brigades on their assessments of the adequacy of fire cover in fire authority areas during a firefighters' strike. [77110]

Mr. Raynsford: The provision of MOD emergency fire cover has been planned centrally in consultation with the Chief Inspector of the Fire Service and locally in consultation with Chief Fire Officers to maximise the effectiveness of call-outs and the availability of a range of firefighting capabilities. The emergency cover would not replicate the firefighting capabilities of the Fire Service, but would aim to minimise the danger to human life. The command and operational structure for emergency cover has been designed to enable maximum flexibility and use of available resources, and there will be a continuous dialogue between the emergency services and Chief Fire Officers.

Mr. Heath: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what level of cross-border co-operation he anticipates between neighbouring fire authorities during a firefighters' strike. [77112]

Mr. Raynsford: In the event of a firefighters' strike, the command and operational structure for emergency fire cover has been designed to enable maximum flexibility and use of available resources, whether from within a county or from assets deployed nearby in neighbouring counties. The fire crews will use a number of temporary stations across counties but the deployment of fire fighters will be based on the assessment by the military in consultation with others such as the police of how best to respond to an emergency in the quickest time possible. The extent to which retained firefighters continue to work will also be taken into account in determining how best to deploy military fire crews.

Homelessness

Tim Loughton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the answer of 21 October 2002, Official Report, column 61W, what recent guidance produced by his Department in connection with the Connexions service he has issued to homelessness agencies working with vulnerable young people; and on what date it was issued. [78197]

Mrs. Roche: "Working Together—Connexions and youth homelessness agencies" outlined effective models of developing the Connexions Personal Adviser role in partnership with homelessness agencies.

The report was launched in October 2001 and has been distributed at conferences discussing youth homelessness issues since then.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will introduce a mechanism for ensuring local government ring-fence monies for waste management as part of the new spending assessment. [77513]

Mr. Raynsford: Our policy is to restrict ring-fencing to cases which are high priorities for Government and where we cannot achieve our policy goal by specifying output or outcome targets; any new ring-fenced grant schemes will also be time-limited. We will announce the results of the review of local government revenue grant distribution in early December. There may also be changes to waste management funding arrangements following detailed consideration of the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit's report on the subject.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of spending by (a) Hampshire county council, (b) Fareham borough council, (c) Durham county council, (d) Durham city council, (e) English county councils and (f) district councils was financed bycouncil tax payers in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [78171]

Mr. Raynsford: The proportion of revenue expenditure financed from the council tax for the above local authorities and class of authorities in the years 1997–98 to 2001–02 was:

Income from council tax as a percentage of spending

Local Government Finance

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the implications are for the detrunking programme of the local government finance formula grant distribution. [76270]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Decisions on which methodology is to be used for the local government finance formula grant distribution will not impact on the detrunking programme.

Park Homes

Mr. Watts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will publish the report on the economics of the park homes industry. [78414]

Mr. McNulty: I am pleased to announce today the publication of the research report on the economics of park homes and the park homes industry, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The report will help us consider options for reform, as part of our wider aim of addressing issues of concern to park home residents.

Public Utilities (Statutory Obligations)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers he has to intervene where local authorities have failed to make public utilities comply with their statutory obligations. [77839]

Mr. Raynsford: Any specific powers for the Secretary of State to intervene in such cases would be set out in the relevant legislation. Generally, enforcement of utilities' obligations is entirely a matter for the relevant regulatory body including, in some cases, local authorities.

Regional Assemblies

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the evidence used by his Department to support proposals for the devolution of powers and functions to elected regional assemblies. [76219]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is set out in the regional governance White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice" (Cm 5511) as part of the rationale for the Government's proposals to give each English region the opportunity to choose whether to have an elected assembly. Elected regional assemblies will have real power and funding to improve the quality of life of people in their region—particularly by improving regional economic performance.

Assemblies will have powers to make a difference in key areas such as jobs, transport, housing, culture and environment. And their block grant will give them much greater freedom to allocate spending according to regional priorities. This offers the prospect of tailored regional solutions to regional problems. It strikes a balance between those issues that are best dealt with at a regional level and those that are best dealt with at a national or a local level. Our proposals for elected assemblies in the English regions will bring decision-making closer to the people and make government more efficient, more effective and more accountable.

The evidence base includes the information presented in "Regional Government in England: a preliminary review of literature and research findings" (published by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in 2000). Other relevant documentation is included in the White Paper's bibliography (annex J). The Government's approach to determining which powers and functions should become the responsibility of elected regional assemblies is described in chapter 4 of the White Paper. Copies of the documents referred to are available in the Library.

Regional Government

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers exercised by central government will be devolved to the proposed regional assemblies. [78174]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is fully set out in Chapter 4 of the regional governance White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice" (Cm 5511).

Residential Property Purchases

Mr. Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to extend the right of local authorities to purchase residential property on the open market; and if he will make a statement. [77103]

Mr. McNulty: We have no plans to make any changes to the powers under which authorities can purchase existing housing outside their compulsory purchase powers.

Travellers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on what discussions he has had with the LGA on travellers; and if he will make a statement on what policy options he has evaluated. [77845]

Mr. Raynsford: Prior to the release of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and Home Office joint Traveller statement of 5 July, the former Housing Minister met with representatives from the LGA to discuss the Government's proposed approach of linking enforcement powers to site provision.

Officials from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will again meet with the LGA to discuss policy development issues in the light of the recently published research on the provision and condition of local authority Gypsy/Traveller sites in England.

Copies of the research are available in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Savings

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 October to the right hon. Member for Fylde, columns 267–68, if he will give the calculation behind his statement on the trend in the level of people's savings. [77865]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) today.

TREASURY

Amateur Sports Clubs

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many community amateur sports clubs (a) have applied and (b) are registered with the Inland Revenue for tax exemptions; and if he will list those registered. [78013]

John Healey: As at 25 October 2002, 334 clubs had applied for registration with the Inland Revenue as community amateur sports clubs. Of those, 126 had so far been registered. A list of those registered follows. The Inland Revenue will be publishing a monthly update of the list on its website.

Aggregates Levy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the causes of the change in aggregate sales since April; [77346]

(2) how much revenue Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland has raised directly as a result of the aggregates levy since the aggregates levy was introduced in April and how much revenue Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland forecast would be raised before the introduction of the aggregates levy; [77342]

(3) what action is being taken by Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland to combat non-payment of the aggregates levy on aggregate brought across the land border from the Republic of Ireland; [77344]

(4) if he will estimate the change in tonnes in aggregate sales in Northern Ireland since the introduction of the aggregates levy; [77345]

(5) if he will estimate the total weight of aggregate brought across the border from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland without payment of aggregates levy since April. [77343]

John Healey: It is too early to assess the impact of the levy.

No estimate has been made of the total weight of aggregate brought across the border from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland without payment of aggregates levy since April. Aggregates levy is due at the point of first commercial exploitation in the UK and not at the point of import. Where it cannot be demonstrated that aggregate is from a levy-paid source, Customs will use their powers to recover the revenue due and impose penalties, where appropriate. The resources allocated to administering the levy in Northern Ireland take account of issues associated with the land boundary, and this resourcing will be subject to regular review.

The revenue forecast for the aggregates levy is made for the UK as a whole, and is not available by devolved region; therefore, data on the aggregates levy revenue raised in Northern Ireland are not available. In total, the levy is forecast to raise £0.2 billion during 2002–03.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 7 November 2001, Official Report, column 256W, and the assumption specified in paragraphs 2.30 and 2.52 of Budget 2002, what further assessment he has made of the start date for the current economic cycle, for the purpose of calculating the cyclically adjusted budget surplus or deficit; and what the calculations are on which that assumption is based. [77373]

Mr. Boateng: The Treasury's methodology for assessing the economic cycle for the purpose of calculating cyclically-adjusted budget surpluses or deficits is set out in publication "Fiscal policy: public finances and the cycle", HM Treasury, March 1999.

An updated assessment will be provided in the forthcoming pre-Budget Report.

Credit Unions

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with (a) credit unions and (b) financial services organisations regarding the establishment of a central services organisation for credit unions; and if he will make a statement [78078]

Ruth Kelly: Treasury Ministers have had a number of discussions with representatives from the credit union sector and financial services organisations regarding the establishment of a central services organisation since the idea was proposed by the Credit Unions Taskforce in November 1999.

The Government believe that credit unions have an important role to play to encourage the accumulation of savings and help tackle financial exclusion. We continue to liaise with the movement and develop proposals to support its development. The establishment of a central services organisation is a project for the credit union movement to take forward. We understand that the Association of British Credit Unions Limited (ABCUL) is developing new plans to deliver some of the services that could have been provided through a central services organisation.

Cross-channel Smuggling

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action is being taken to tackle cross-channel smuggling; and if he will make a statement. [78321]

John Healey: Tobacco smuggling grew very rapidly in the late 1990s until, by 2000–01, over 20 per cent. of the cigarette market was illicit. The cost of that tobacco smuggling to UK taxpayers was £3.5 billion. A further 6 per cent. of the market was legally non-tax paid product bought abroad and brought back for own use.

The great majority of cigarette smuggling is undertaken by serious and organised criminals who conceal large volumes of cigarettes in excess of 1 million at a time in freight consignments. In 2000 a smaller proportion was smuggled by cross-channel passengers. However in that year the total cost of such passenger excise smuggling was still £1.7 billion.

Had no action been taken over the past two years Customs and Excise estimate that the illicit share of the cigarette market would have reached 31 per cent. by the end of March 2002.

Since the launch of the Tackling Tobacco Strategy in March 2000, Customs and Excise have been successful in containing growth in the illicit cigarette market, disrupted over 100 organised crime gangs responsible for the vast majority of the smuggling, and have had dramatic success in cutting losses from cross-channel passenger smuggling by almost three-quarters. Figures for 2001–02, the second year of this strategy, will be published at the time of the pre-Budget report and I anticipate they will show that the strategy remains on track. In the same period consumer expenditure on legitimate cross-border shopping for alcohol and tobacco has grown by 10 per cent.

In 2000–01 Customs seized 2.8 billion cigarettes. Of these, 0.9 billion were seized overseas through the work of the Customs Overseas Liaison Officer network, a further 1.2 billion were seized in freight consignments, 400 million were seized inland and 55 million were seized at the ports from cross-channel passenger smugglers.

The sole focus of Customs excise enforcement activity in respect of cross-channel passenger traffic is to tackle those who smuggle tobacco or alcohol, having received or intending to receive money or money's worth for those goods. The Government have consistently made clear that people are entitled to bring into the UK without liability to tax as much EU tax-paid tobacco or alcohol as they wish for their own use. Customs literature also makes this clear.

Just one-tenth of 1 per cent. of those who have crossed the channel in the past two years have had tobacco or alcohol seized by Customs. Since the start of the strategy, the average quantity seized by Customs from cross-channel passenger smugglers was approximately 4,900 cigarettes and 15 kilos of hand rolling tobacco (equivalent to at least 18,000 cigarettes).

Of the 0.1 per cent. of cross-channel passengers who had tobacco or alcohol seized in the years 2000–01 and 2001–02 over 75 per cent. chose not to make any sort of appeal against that seizure. Of those that did appeal, magistrates courts overwhelmingly backed the judgments made by Customs, and found against Customs in less than 0.1 per cent. of cases, and only 1 per cent. of cases were either overturned or restored by a Customs review officer or by an independent tribunal.

Building on the success of the Budget 2000 anti-smuggling measures, I am today announcing the next stage of the Tackling Tobacco Strategy. Despite cross-channel tobacco smuggling having been cut by around three-quarters in the past two years, smugglers are becoming increasingly sophisticated in their attempts to blend in with honest shoppers. So the measures I am announcing today will help make the distinction between smugglers and honest shoppers even clearer. The measures make clear that Customs activity is legal and fair but tough upon those who attempt to smuggle. It comprises the following components:

Regulations will be laid before Parliament today to abolish the 1992 Personal Reliefs Order and replace it with new provisions that:

effectively define shopping and smuggling, specify the factors Customs will take into account in distinguishing one from the other and place the onus for that decision upon Customs;

reaffirm that all Customs stops are lawful and those for excise specific purposes based on reasonable grounds for suspicion; increase the Indicative Levels for tobacco from 800 to 3,200 cigarettes and from 1 to 3kgs of hand rolling tobacco, representing around six-months supply for an average smoker. Those bringing back larger quantities of tobacco must expect, if asked, to explain how it is that such goods are for their own use. Customs will continue to seize quantities below these levels as well as above them where they are satisfied that those goods are intended for resale or other exchange for money or money's worth.

In addition, the announcements I am making today will confirm that:

Vehicles used to smuggle tobacco or alcohol will continue to be liable to seizure but for small first offences Customs will offer restoration of the vehicle for the value of the attempted revenue evasion. Those who use vehicles to smuggle on a large scale or a repeat basis will not be offered such an opportunity and must expect to lose their vehicles.

A new clearer guide to appealing/complaining is being published by Customs today and will be given to all those who have goods seized or wish to complain about Customs behaviour towards them.

I have asked Customs to undertake, in conjunction with the Lord Chancellor's Department, a review of the present appeals structure and to present proposals for streamlining and simplifying these arrangements to me by the end of January 2003. The Terms of Reference will be available today in the Library of the House and on the Customs website (), together with details for submitting contributions.

Having brought cross-channel passenger smuggling under control the Government is determined that it should remain so. To this end, Customs expect to conduct an increased number of prosecutions against large scale and serial cross-channel passenger smugglers.

Violence against Customs officers in the course of carrying out their duties will not be tolerated under any circumstances. Customs will toughen their policy and prosecute anyone who perpetrates serious assaults on staff.

This set of measures provides the public with a clear guide to their right to shop for alcohol or tobacco for their own use within the EU and to the consequences for those who attempt to evade tax in bringing in such goods having received or intending to receive money or money's worth for some or all of them. It will also enable Customs to continue to prevent the smuggling of tobacco or alcohol and the disorder which accompanies such smuggling from ruining the enjoyment of honest cross-border shoppers. It will also enable Customs to prevent the smugglers from undermining the UK economy in alcohol or tobacco products and from depriving our public services of essential tax revenues. Customs will act fairly and in accordance with the law but they will also act firmly and with the full weight of sanctions against those who break the law.

Private Pension Schemes

Mr. Jack: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was put into private pension schemes of all types in each of the last five years, per head of the working population. [77826]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact that the level of public sector pay settlements is having on the money available to meet the targets set out in public service agreements. [78177]

Mr. Boateng: Departments are responsible for ensuring that targets are delivered within the budgets which have been set.

Small Businesses

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the Confederation of British Industry regarding the position of small businesses. [77940]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers meet regularly with business leaders and others to discuss a wide range of topics.

Tax Receipts

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the expected outturn for tax receipts for 2002–03. [78179]

Dawn Primarolo: Consistent with the Code for Fiscal Stability, an interim update of projections for the public finances will be published in the forthcoming pre-Budget Report.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Vehicles

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many vehicles she and her Ministers have access to, broken down by vehicle type; what the annual operating costs are for the last three financial years; how much it costs to convert a car so it is suitable for a Minister; and if she will make a statement. [76925]

Dr. Howells: Four cars are accessible to Ministers in the Department for Culture, Media and Sport as follows:

Vauxhall Omega Elite; Vauxhall Vectra GLS; and two Ford Mondeo Zetec's.

The annual operating cost for the past three years are:

	April 2000 to March 2001	April 2001 to March 2002	April 2002 to March 2003
Secretary of State	61,028	62,700	67,620

The cost of converting a car to enable it to be suitable for a Minister is £510.

Draft Communications Bill

James Purnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she plans to publish the Government's response to the Joint Committee on the Draft Communications Bill. [78438]

Tessa Jowell: With my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, I have pleasure to inform the House that the Government's formal response to the Joint Committee on the Draft Communications Bill will be published this afternoon. I would also like to express my gratitude to Lord Puttnam and his committee for their valuable contribution to our preparations of the Communications Bill.

Drug Testing

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tests for EPO have been conducted in the UK during (a) the Commonwealth Games and (b) other sporting events; and if she will make a statement. [77518]

Mr. Caborn: The anti-doping programme in the UK is delivered through the national anti-doping organisation, UK Sport. In addition, UK Sport was contracted by the Commonwealth Games Federation in conjunction with Manchester 2002 (the organising committee for the 2002 Commonwealth Games) to manage the anti-doping programme over the Games period.

UK Sport has confirmed that during the Commonwealth Games it conducted 16 tests for erythropoietin (EPO). The other sporting events where UK Sport has conducted EPO testing have been the 2002 London Marathon, where 16 EPO tests were undertaken, and the World Half Marathon, which took place in Bristol in October 2001, where five EPO tests were undertaken.

Firefighters' Strike

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what preparations she has made to ensure the safety and continuity of service to the public in the event of a firefighters' strike; and what the cost is to the Department of these actions. [77657]

Dr. Howells: DCMS staff are fully trained in fire safety, and have been reminded of the need for greater care and vigilance in the event of a firefighters' strike. This measure, which will ensure the continuity of services operated directly from DCMS, has been achieved at no additional cost to the annual administration budget. The majority of our services are provided through the Department's NDPBs, who are responsible for making their own provisions for ensuring business continuity in the event of a firefighters' strike.

ITV Digital

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has received from football clubs over the collapse of ITV Digital; and if she will make a statement. [77960]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have received 31 representations from Football League clubs on this issue.

Sport England

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to her answer of 26 September 2002, Official Report, column 131W, on Sport England, if she will list the projections for UK Sport's income from the National Lottery for (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04, (c) 2004–05 and (d) 2005–06. [78267]

Mr. Caborn: The projected income for UK Sport from the National Lottery, based on the most recent forecast figures provided to the Lottery Distributors, excluding interest, is shown in the table.

	2002–03	2003–04	2004–05	2005–06
UK Sport	20.732	20.318	20.318	20.318

DEFENCE

Beef Supplies

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the beef supply contracts for the Ministry of Defence and its agencies are sourced from Scottish herds. [76812]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 24 October 2002]: I can confirm that 50% of the beef and beef products purchased for consumption by the armed forces in the United Kingdom is British. Of that total, in the past 12 months, 53 per cent. came from Scottish herds.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the six Chinook MSH/HC2A and eight Chinook MSH/HC3 ordered by his Department in 1995 will enter service with the RAF. [76379]

Mr. Ingram: The six Chinook MSH/HC2A entered RAF service in 2000.

On current plans, it is intended that the RAF will begin to fly the Chinook MSH/HC3 from the end of 2003.

Civil Service Pay

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 October 2002, Official Report, column 151W, if he will estimate the annual increases in pay for Ministry of Defence non-industrial civil servants working only in his Department, excluding agencies and non-departmental public bodies, for each year from 2001–02 to 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [77520]

Dr. Moonie: The figures are listed in the table:

	Percentage increase to paybill of non-industrial staff
2003	3.1
2005	3.1

Continuous Attitude Survey

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel in the (a) Army, (b) RAF and (c) Royal Navy answered the last Continuous Attitude Survey; and what proportion of the service members in each service this represents. [77285]

Mr. Ingram: The number of personnel that responded to the last Continuous Attitude Survey for each Service is set out in the table.

	Number responding	Proportion of personnel (percentage)
Naval Service	957	2
Army	1,867	1.9
RAF	1,182	2.4

Note:
Based on trained strength figures for the United Kingdom regulars as at 1 September 2002.

Defence Logistics Organisation

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the McKinsey report on the future strategy for the Defence Logistics Organisation. [77064]

Mr. Ingram: We have no plans to publish the joint McKinsey/Ministry of Defence report.

Discharged Service Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel have been (a) discharged and (b) retired early from the RAF after being in service in (i) Sierra Leone, (ii) Saif Sareea, (iii) Afghanistan, (iv) Kosovo and (v) Macedonia as a direct result of their involvement in the deployments; and if he will make a statement. [78287]

Mr. Ingram: The detailed information requested is not held centrally and cannot be determined from individual personnel records without incurring disproportionate cost and effort. There are no recorded instances of RAF personnel being medically discharged as a direct result of disabilities sustained during service in the named theatres of operation.

Fire Services

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if (a) MoD Fire Service appliances and (b) QinetiQ fire appliances from Boscombe Down will be deployed to provide fire service cover to the civilian community. [77232]

Mr. Ingram: Ownership of all fire service appliances at Boscombe Down was transferred to QinetiQ in 2001. The fire fighting capabilities at Boscombe Down are tailored to meet the primary need to provide emergency support to the airfield at the site and to support QinetiQ's activities. Although QinetiQ's fire service may be able to assist in response to emergency calls elsewhere in circumstances where their primary responsibility was not put at risk, this cannot be guaranteed.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Green Goddess fire engines will be deployed in Salisbury constituency; how many service personnel will man each appliance; and from what duties they have been withdrawn to provide fire service cover. [77316]

Mr. Ingram: One Green Goddess fire engine will be based in Salisbury. The command structure is designed to ensure flexibility when deploying emergency fire cover, and where necessary resources may be deployed from adjacent areas.

Each Green Goddess has a crew of six per shift, with two shifts, each of 12 hours, providing 24-hour cover. The personnel involved may be withdrawn from a variety of other duties, depending on changing circumstances.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fire service vehicles there are at Norton

Manor Camp; and what fire service appliances kept at Norton Manor Camp will be deployed to provide fire service cover to the civilian community. [77763]

Mr. Ingram: There are no emergency fire service vehicles at Norton Manor Camp and there are currently no plans to deploy any emergency fire cover from there. However, a range of fire fighting capabilities, including breathing apparatus and heavy cutting capability will operate from Taunton TA Centre nearby.

It is intended to use all available resources in a flexible manner to provide the most appropriate cover. Where necessary, resources may be deployed from adjacent areas.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, in the event of a firefighters' strike, what disposition of service personnel and Green Goddesses will be made for the protection of the people and their property in the Solihull constituency; and where they will be stationed. [77782]

Mr. Ingram: [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Emergency cover in Solihull, as in the rest of the country, will consist of a number of elements including Green Goddess crews, breathing apparatus teams, rescue teams (equipped with specialist equipment) and the police. The provision of Ministry of Defence emergency fire cover has been planned in consultation with the Chief Fire Officer and local police to minimise call-out times and maximise the availability of the range of firefighting capabilities.

Temporary fire stations will be located at the Police Traffic Centre, Aston, and the Police Training Centre, Pershore Road. Each location will have three Green Goddess appliances and one Specialist Breathing Apparatus Rescue Team. The Operational Control Centre, based at Bournville, will be responsible for co-ordinating emergency response in the quickest time possible, either through the deployment of these assets, or by requesting assistance from other areas.

First World War

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received asking him to review the cases of soldiers who were shot for cowardice during the First World War; and if he will make a statement. [77046]

Dr. Moonie: In the last six months I have received six representations from hon. and right hon. Members and 22 from members of the public on this issue.

As the House has been told on previous occasions, my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, Dr. Reid, examined this matter in great detail and with deep care and concern. There are considerable legal difficulties in considering pardons, particularly the lack of evidence available today, and all these points were explained in my right hon. Friend's statement to this House on 24 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1372–86.

While there are, I am afraid, no grounds to reconsider this matter, it is important that we do not overlook the very important steps that have been taken to recognise these men as victims of the war, and to draw them and their families into the nation's consciousness and remembrance. The public commemoration of these men in the new memorial in National Memorial Arboretum is very fitting.

Gulf War Veterans

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Gulf War veterans from the Twickenham constituency have been seen by the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme; how many of these were assessed; how many were assessed as having a cancer; and if he will make a statement. [76929]

Dr. Moonie: As at 18 October 3,334 patients have attended the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (GVMAP), and of these, three Gulf veterans were recorded as living in the Twickenham constituency. None were assessed as having a cancer.

The clinical findings for 3,000 Service and ex-Service patients who attended the GVMAP in the period between 11 October 1993 and 18 June 2001 was published in the Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine on 1 October 2002. The paper found that 75 per cent. of the 3,000 patients seen were well at the time of attendance. The authors found no unusual pattern of disease among patients attending over time.

International Interoperability Council

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the membership of the International Interoperability Council is; what its objectives are; and if he will make a statement on its method of proceeding. [77791]

Mr. Hoon: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the Multinational Interoperability Council (MIC) which comprises Australia, Canada, France, Germany, United Kingdom and the United States of America. The objectives of the MIC are to identify interoperability issues and to articulate actions which, if implemented pan-nationally, would contribute to more effective coalition operations. The work of the MIC is principally conducted by means of Working Groups. Further information on the MIC is available at www.c3i.osd.mil/org/c3is/ccbm/mic.html.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the annual cost of implementing the no-fly zones over northern and southern Iraq since RAF military overflights began; how many bombs have been dropped on Iraq by British aircraft over this period; and what United Nations resolutions give authority for the policing of the no-fly zone. [75981]

Mr. Ingram: Our records do not separately identify expenditure incurred in maintaining the no-fly zones. However, the table sets out the overall additional expenditure incurred by the Ministry of Defence as a direct result of operations in the Gulf from 1992–93 onwards.

	Additional expenditure
1992–93	551
1993–94	179
1994–95	58
1995–96	14
1996–97	6
1997–98	16
1998–99	35
1999–2000	28
2000–01	25
2001–02[1]	22[2]

[1] Estimate.
[2] Calculated on a resource basis; all previous figures are cash-based.

The Royal Air Force aircraft patrolling the Iraqi no-fly zones had dropped 318 bombs during this period (to 30 September 2002), 52 of those weapons were released during Operation Desert Fox.

The Royal Air Force patrol the Iraqi no-fly zones in support of UN SCR 688, which demanded an end to Saddam's brutal repression of its own people.

Medical Negligence Claims

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many medical negligence claims were received by his Department in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002 to date; how many complaints in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002 resulted in compensation being paid; how much compensation was paid in each year; and if he will make a statement. [77286]

Dr. Moonie: The number of claims received for alleged clinical negligence together with the amount of common law compensation paid in 2000–01, 2001–02 and between 1 April to 23 October 2002 was as follows:

	Clinical negligence claims received	Number of claims settled	Compensation paid including claimants' legal costs (£)
2000–01	128	79	10,617,263
2001–02	142	59	8,924,255
2002–03[1]	78	26	6,427,000

[1] 1 April to 23 October 2002

When compensation claims are submitted, they are considered on the basis of whether or not the Ministry of Defence has a legal liability to pay compensation. Where there is a legal liability to pay compensation, we do so. Most claims are settled amicably on a legal liability basis without recourse to the courts. The payment of compensation does not necessarily occur in the financial year that the claim was received.

A record of complaints from Service personnel and their families alleging medical negligence is kept only for those cases where compensation is being sought.

Military Trucks

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies which have submitted bids for the military trucks contract; and when an announcement on the award of the contract will be made. [77601]

Dr. Moonie: Bids for the military trucks contract were received from four companies—MAN UK Truck & Bus Limited, Mercedes-Benz UK Limited, Oshkosh Truck Corporation and Stewart & Stevenson Services Inc. An announcement on the award of the contract will be made at contract placement in late 2003.

Network-centric Capability (Armed Forces)

Mr. Hendrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to enhance the network-centric capability of the armed forces. [76863]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 October 2002]: As we stated in the Strategic Defence Review New Chapter, the key to delivering networked capabilities is the ability to collect, fuse and disseminate accurate, timely and relevant information to deliver improved situational awareness—a shared understanding of the battlespace among commanders at all levels. We are already committed to investment in a range of sensor capabilities such as Nimrod MRA4, ASTOR and RAPTOR and communications systems such as SKYNET 5, BOWMAN, FALCON and tactical datalinks—part of the backbone of our network infrastructure. We are also investing in information processing applications that will enhance our capability to collate, analyse and control the distribution of information within the network. As part of the New Chapter we announced a number of early capability enhancements that will help improve situational awareness, for example, an extra Mission Console for the E3-D and advancing the WATCHKEEPER Surveillance UAV programme.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith), Official Report, 15 October 2002, column 547W, on nuclear weapons, if he will estimate the size of the credits payable to the UK under the 1998 MOU. [77799]

Dr. Moonie: The size of the credits payable to the United Kingdom under the 1998 MOU total $47 million, based on fiscal year 1999 constant dollars.

Partnered Defence Supply Chain

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the employment implications of the Partnered Defence Supply Chain Initiative; and when he will be able to inform the House. [77065]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Logistics Organisation has challenging targets to reduce costs whilst improving the quality of logistics support to the Front Line. As part of this, the Partnered Defence Supply Chain Initiative is seeking to assess the risks and opportunities of increased levels of commercial participation in managing and operating the Defence Physical Supply Chain. This analysis has only just commenced therefore it is too early to ascertain what potential employment implications there could be. I will inform the House of the results of the current initial assessment, anticipated to be complete in the middle of next year.

Pension and Compensation Arrangements

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish proposals on armed forces pension and compensation arrangements; and what consultation process he envisages following such publication. [77790]

Mr. Ingram: Proposals on the new Armed Forces Pension Scheme and Compensation Scheme were published in March 2001. The formal consultations took place between March 2001 and July 2001, although they were informally extended to October 2001 to admit some late replies. In parallel, discussion groups took place at Service units throughout the country and discussions were also held with ex-Service organisations, such as the Royal British Legion and Forces Pension Society. The final proposals are currently being staffed for final approval by Ministers. These proposals have taken account of the comments received during the consultation process, the recommendations of the House of Commons Defence Committee, and discussions with the ex-Service community. Subject to approval around the turn of the year, the final details of the schemes and a report on the consultations will be published early next year.

Puma (Tenders)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions he took to obtain tenders for the refurbishment of six ex-Republic of South Africa SA330 Puma aircraft before announcing his intention to place the main structural contract with Eurocopter of France; and what steps he took to ascertain what other companies were capable of undertaking this work. [77120]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The ex-Republic of South Africa Air Puma helicopters were procured to supplement the existing Ministry of Defence Puma fleet. Because the aircraft had not flown for over five years, and their previous usage spectrum was unknown, it was essential to ensure that the airworthiness and structural integrity of the aircraft could be adequately assured. Options for effecting the refurbishment of the aircraft to the same standard as the existing fleet were evaluated. It was assessed that Eurocopter, the design authority for the Puma, was the only company with the necessary knowledge of, and competences in, the structural load paths of the Puma to be able to act as a prime contractor. As a result, an entry was placed in the MOD Contracts Bulletin notifying that the work would be placed with Eurocopter, while encouraging Eurocopter to maximise sub-contractor opportunities.

RAF Innsworth

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce the number of civilians employed at RAF Innsworth; and if he will make a statement. [77039]

Mr. Ingram: A wide-ranging review, PTC 2002, was initiated last year. Its aim was to optimise management processes and structures to support operational capabilities in a more timely, efficient and cost-effective manner. PTC 2002 reported in April this year, and recommended a rationalised HQ structure.

A formal evaluation to validate the revised structure is currently being undertaken. However, the latest available figures indicate that there will be a reduction of around 180 posts across PTC (140 civilian (non-industrial) posts and 40 service posts). We estimate that civilian reductions at RAF Innsworth will be in the region of 50, with the remainder 90 occurring at other PTC stations. We intend that all manpower reductions will be effected through natural wastage.

Rapid Deployment Force

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the UK contribution to the proposed NATO rapid deployment force unit will be; and if he will make a statement. [77811]

Mr. Hoon: The NATO Response Force (NRF) concept is currently being discussed within the Alliance, with the guiding principles expected to be put before Heads of State and Government at the November 2002 NATO Summit in Prague for their agreement. While it is premature to discuss what the United Kingdom's precise contribution will be, the UK strongly supports the NRF concept as a means of optimising the utility of the NATO Force Structure across the range of missions. We can therefore anticipate that the UK led Headquarters of the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps, the United Kingdom Maritime Force and our contribution to NATO Readiness Forces (Air), will form the basis of our participation in the NRF.

Thefts

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 548W, he will assign monetary values to each of the items (a) to (e). [77233]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to my hon. Friend, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Vaccination

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what vaccination programmes for UK armed forces are (a) under way and (b) planned in advance of possible military action in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [76291]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Regular and reserve forces personnel are offered immunisations as part of an established vaccination programme. Members of the regular forces are given routine vaccinations, with immunity being maintained by the administration of regular boosters. Reservists at high readiness for deployment also have their immunity maintained at a similar level by routine booster immunisations. All other reserve forces personnel receive a lesser number of routine immunisations with additional vaccinations, and any necessary boosters, being administered upon an increase to a high readiness state. In advance of overseas deployment, any personnel deploying to areas with a specific health hazard, and those in special occupational risk groups (such as medical personnel), may also be given additional vaccinations before deployment. It is the responsibility of Commanding Officers to ensure that personnel are up to date with the appropriate immunisations. Units should also carry out pre deployment checks of vaccination states. Immunisation also forms part of the package of capabilities which protects our troops from, and enables them to respond effectively to, the threat of biological warfare. Since May 2001, personnel deploying on operations to the Gulf and in specialist NEC units have been included in our programme of voluntary immunisation against anthrax. We have since expanded this programme; I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave on 3 June 2002, Official Report, column 1343–44W, to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Levitt).

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Local Education Authority Funding

Mr. Dave Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children aged between four and 18 years are in schools in local education authorities; if she will list the funding allocated to each school under her Department's proposed options; and if she will publish the deprivation allocation from additional educational needs under the Government's options (a) with and (b) without any ethnicity-weighting factor. [77160]

Mr. Miliband: There were 7,438,964 pupils between 4 and 18 in maintained schools in local education authorities recorded in the most recent annual schools census. It is not possible to identify the funding allocated to each school under the options set out in the consultation paper on Local Government Finance issued on 8 July: that would depend on decisions to be taken by LEAs on their formulae for distributing funding to their schools. The amounts of funding distributed for additional educational needs, and within that for ethnicity and English as an additional language (EAL), under each of the four consultation options is set out in the table below:

Funding for 2002–03	Option 1	Option 2	Option 3	Option4
Deprivation Funding (£m)	4,880	4,118	4,940	4,006
Ethnicity/EAL Funding (£m)	600	421	600	431

The levels of funding in these options are based on research from PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC). If an alternative method of funding AEN were used, it would be necessary to consider how it could fit with the evidence from the PwC study, which associated substantial costs with the incidence of EAL.

A Levels

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received since August on the future of A Levels. [76493]

Mr. Miliband: The Secretary of State has received a number of suggestions that AS Levels be abolished, and that a baccalaureate type system be introduced in place of A Levels.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimates she has made of the cost of this year's A-level regrading to her Department. [76783]

Mr. Miliband: We have made it clear that universities and higher education colleges will not suffer financial disadvantage as a result of changes to student numbers due to A level regrading. It is, however, too early to determine how much funding individual institutions might need, but the costs are not likely to be high given the relatively small number of students affected.

The A level claims Fund has been established to meet the legitimate costs of students who are able to transfer and students have until 31 January 2003 to apply. The Fund can meet accommodation, books, travel and where necessary tuition fees. We expect the costs falling to the Fund to be small.

A maximum of £105,000 has been set aside for Mike Tomlinson's Inquiry.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the implications of the admission of downgraded A-level students to university for the admission of (a) other EU and (b) overseas students. [74666]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 15 October 2002]: All of the 168 UCAS applicants who, as a result of regrading of their A-levels, may now have the necessary grades to make them eligible for transfer to their first or second choice institution. As all are from the UK, and none are from EU countries other than the UK or from overseas, there will be no implication for these students.

Accommodation Centres (Education Facilities)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether educational facilities in accommodation centres will have (a) a special educational needs co-ordinator and (b) classroom assistants trained to assist with special educational needs. [76939]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The staffing mix in accommodation centres will mirror as closely as possible that of a typical maintained school. The centres will have sufficient experienced and trained staff to meet the needs of most pupils with SEN.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her estimate is of the number of (a) teachers and (b) classroom assistants that will be required to teach a total of 120 children in Years 1 to 13 in accommodation centres. [76940]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimate. She has, however, made clear that the composition of the teaching staff in accommodation centres should mirror as closely as possible that of maintained schools and be appropriate to the needs of the children concerned.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether children in accommodation centres will be (a) allowed and (b) required to take GCSEs. [76941]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: There will be no requirement for children in accommodation centres to take GCSE's. However, if a child has the ability to undertake such an examination, they will be able to do so. Each child will be assessed individually and their progress monitored and recorded throughout their stay.

Beacon Schools

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools have not been successful in reapplying for beacon status. [77746]

Mr. Miliband: There have been two renewal exercises to date involving a total of 250 schools. Beacon status was not extended in 26 cases.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what weight he gives to an increase of pupils with statements of special education needs when evaluating the educational results of a school when assessing a renewal application for beacon status. [77747]

Mr. Miliband: Renewal of beacon status is dependent on a school being able to show that it has had an impact as a beacon and that it has maintained or improved its own performance in its three years as a beacon . Schools are advised to provide evidence of any factors that may have an effect on the school's performance, such as the number of pupils with statements of special education needs, so that these can be taken into account at the time of the assessment.

Children's Education

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many SENDIST and IAP members there were as at the end of June; how many SENDIST and IAP members had received any training as at the end of June in their forthcoming disability-related duties; what type and quantity of training they had received respectively; and what measures the Department has put in place to ensure that all SENDIST and IAP members will be able to perform their legal duty effectively when hearing claims of disability discrimination relating to exclusions. [77860]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: There are three main types of panel or tribunal relating to educational provision for children: SEN and Disability Tribunals (SENDIST), Admission Appeal Panels, and Exclusion Appeal Panels.

SENDIST consider disputes between parents and LEAs about statementing of children with Special Educational Needs. They also consider complaints of disability discrimination made by parents against individual schools or LEAs.

At the end of June the Special Educational Needs Tribunal had 51 legal chairmen and 97 specialist members. The Secretary of State appointed 39 new specialist members in July. The Lord Chancellor has appointed 11 new chairmen.

By the end of June, 21 SEN Tribunal chairmen and 40 specialist members had received one and a half day's training on disability discrimination legislation. The training included theoretical and practical sessions that covered all the relevant provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act, including the implications for school exclusions. The President of the Tribunal arranged training for tribunal members at three conferences, in June, July and September. The SEN Tribunal became SENDIST from September. Tribunal panels are likely to hear the first claims under the new legislation in the new year.

Independent Admission Appeal Panels consider parents' appeals against refusal of admission of their children to particular schools. Responsibility for setting up a panel, and recruitment and training of panel members lies with the school's "admission authority" (in the case of voluntary aided and foundation schools this is the school's governing body, for community and controlled schools it is the local education authority). Although admission authorities themselves are responsible for the training of panel members, Information for School and College Governors (ISCG), who are one of a number of organisations delivering practitioner training, produced a training pack which is available free of charge to schools and LEAs. The revised Admission Appeals Code (to be laid before Parliament soon) contains guidance on the Disability Discrimination Act, and refers readers to other appropriate sources of help.

Exclusion Appeal Panels consider appeals made by parents whose children have been excluded from a school, and the exclusion upheld by the school governing body. The panels are set up by LEAs, who are responsible for appointing and training members. The Department is currently revising its guidance in the "Exclusion Appeal Panels Training Pack", with regard to the Disabilities Discrimination Act. This revised guidance will be issued shortly.

The Department does not collect data on admission or exclusion appeal panel members or information on the training they receive.

The Council of Tribunals (which operates under the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1992) advises and supervises the procedures and working of tribunals. The Council, and the Judicial Studies Board, has a significant interest in the training of panel members. The Council of Tribunals publication "Making Tribunals Accessible to Disabled People: Guidance on Applying the Disability Discrimination Act" is available to both panel members and those responsible for their training.

Children's Health

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the role of schools in the health of children; and what measures have been taken to ensure that food and meals provided at school are nutritional. [77010]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Schools are encouraged, as part of the National Healthy School Standard, to present consistent messages about healthy eating. Food on offer in vending machines, tuck shops and school meals, for example, should complement the information about healthy eating covered in the taught curriculum.

In April 2001, the Government introduced regulations which set minimum nutritional standards for school lunches. They were accompanied by guidance entitled 'Healthy School Lunches', which is available for school caterers, heads and others implementing the standards.

Class Sizes

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many primary schools in Castle Point had class sizes of 30 or above in each of the last three years. [75470]

Mr. Miliband: Figures for January 2002 show that there were 19 maintained primary schools in Castle Point parliamentary constituency with classes of 30 pupils or more. The corresponding figures for 2000 and 2001 were 19 and 21, respectively.

The School Standards and Framework Act 1998 placed a duty on Local Education Authorities and schools to ensure that infant classes for 5, 6 and 7 year olds taught by one qualified teacher are limited to no more than 30 pupils per class by September 2001 at the latest. The legislation does allow the limit of 30 to be exceeded in certain circumstances.

Figures related to the pledge for Castle Point parliamentary constituency show there were no classes of 31 or more pupils in 2002. In 2001 there was one class, and in 2000 there were 9 classes, of 31 or more pupils.

Classroom Assistants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received supporting the extension of the work of classroom assistants into some aspects of teaching; who was consulted before the proposal was announced; and how many representations (a) for and (b) against he has received. [77678]

Mr. Miliband: A working party involving representatives of teachers and support staff, local government employers and other government bodies has met monthly over the past year and has had extensive discussions about the proposed extension of roles and responsibilities of teaching assistants and other support staff. These discussions led to the development of a consultation paper, "Developing the Roles of School Support Staff", which was published on 22 October 2002. An analysis of responses to the consultation will be produced after the response deadline of 22 January 2003.

Connexions

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people have visited Connexions, seeking advice, in each region in which it operates. [77349]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Information is not collected in the exact format requested; however the following table shows the number of occasions that young people have received assistance in each region since April 2001. Young people may have received assistance on more than one occasion. 2001–02 and 2002–03 are shown separately as different definitions of management information have been used in the two years, reflecting the move away from counting all contacts with young people to recording only those of a substantial nature.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the annual budget for the Connexions service is, broken down by region. [77350]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 28 October 2002]: In total £334,627,254 was allocated to Connexions Partnerships in 2002–03. The regional totals are as follows:

South East	32,060,363
London	58,091,947
East of England	29,063,827

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what grants have been made to voluntary organisations working with young people by the Connexions service, for each region in which it operates. [77351]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 28 October 2002]: 15 Connexions partnerships became operational through the course of 2001–02. Details of grants provided by these partnerships to voluntary and community organisations in 2001–02 by English region are as given in the table. Connexions partnerships will be allocating grants throughout the year so figures for 2002–03 are not currently available.

These figures are as reported to the Connexions Service National Unit by Government offices for the regions. No Connexions partnerships were operational in the north east during 2001–02. In the east midlands and south east only one partnership was operational in each region during 2001–02. Grant arrangements in these partnerships had not been finalised at the time so figures are unavailable. The total represents 4.17 per cent. of the total grant allocation to partnerships by the Connexions Service National Unit.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many teachers were unable to gain clearance from the Criminal Records Bureau before the first day of the new school year in (a) Lancashire and (b) the North West of England; [77631]

(2) how many school days were lost due to teachers being unable to gain clearance from the Criminal Records Bureau before the first day of the new school year in the North West of England. [77632]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is not available.

Departmental Projects (Hull, North)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list the projects to which his Department has allocated funding in the Hull, North constituency since 1997, indicating the amount in each case. [76561]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

Education SSA

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the education SSA is per head in secondary schools in Wandsworth. [77289]

Mr. Miliband: In 2002–03 Wandsworth's Education SSA per pupil in secondary schools is 4,460.

Note:

English/Mathematics Targets

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what special assistance she proposes to provide to those local education authorities whose results in English and Mathematics for 11-year-olds in 2002 fell a long way short of the Government's 2004 target; and if she will make a statement. [77340]

Mr. Miliband: Following this year's Key Stage 2 results the Department asked all LEAs to draw up specific plans to identify and provide targeted support to those schools which are underperforming—both low attaining schools and those which are not helping their children make as much progress as other similar schools. Over the next couple of months the Department is meeting with all LEAs individually to discuss these plans and the further support they need to meet the challenging targets for 2004. The National Literacy and Numeracy Strategies will continue to help LEAs improve their results, in particular by focusing low attaining and underperforming schools, improving leadership and intervention programmes for pupils who are not achieving their potential. We are allocating an additional £11 million this year to support schools make improvements in 2003.

Examinations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to alter the administration of examinations in England. [76490]

Mr. Miliband: The Tomlinson report on A Level standards made a number of recommendations, which the Department accepted in full. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority are now acting to implement these. The second stage of the Tomlinson inquiry will make further recommendations by the end of November.

Exclusion

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils have been excluded from (a) state primary and (b) state secondary schools in the London Borough of Hillingdon at each of the key stages in each year since 1997. [77294]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table. Information collected centrally on permanent exclusions does not record the Key Stage of the pupil; a breakdown of the figures by age is given as a proxy. Figures are not available centrally on fixed-term exclusions.

Exclusion Appeals Panels

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance has been sent by her Department to school exclusion appeals panels since 1998. [76786]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Circular 10/99 published in July 1999 contained statutory guidance on exclusion including the working of appeal panels. Letters amending the guidance in Circular 10/99 were issued in January and August 2000 and January and June 2001.

This guidance was sent to local education authorities which are responsible in law for establishing the panels.

In addition a training pack for exclusion appeal panels was sent to all LEAs in September 2001.

Expenditure (Secondary Schools)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what his estimate is of the average expenditure on (a) secondary school places per pupil in the state sector and (b) secondary school places per day pupil in the independent sector; and if he will make a statement; [75255]

(2) what his estimate is of the total local and national government expenditure, per pupil, in state secondary schools in 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [76547]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 October 2002]: For the state sector, the estimated average recurrent expenditure funded by central and local government in 2001–02 was £3,600 per pupil. Independent Schools Council figures suggest a private school recurrent spending figure of £5,400 per annum. Some caution is needed in making detailed comparisons between the sectors as it is not easy to calculate per pupil funding exactly on a like-for-like basis.

Focus Group Research

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what use he and his Department has made of focus group research since June 2001; if he will identify for each research project the topics covered, the person or organisation carrying out the research, and the total cost; and if he will publish the research on his Department's website. [74987]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Since June 2001 the Department has completed focus group work for:

Higher Education Student Support commissioned groups to explore how first year students and parents navigated the HE student support website. This was at a cost of £44,050. The work was done by the research agency Conway Smith Rose.

Strategic research was done by the agency Campbell Keegan to gauge young people's attitudes to, and perceptions of, education. The cost was £62,334.

Fathers were asked their reaction to the new magazine "Dads and Sons" to find out if the publication had any impact on their behaviour to their sons. This work was done by Solutions Strategy Research for £23,030.

Women between 18 and 40 joined a focus group run by Solutions Strategy Research to discuss child care recruitment at a cost of £17,743.

Men and women over 40 were followed up by the same agency for £27,143.

Solutions Strategy Research conducted focus groups with ethnic minorities to look at the barriers to working in child care for £41,000.

Ethnic minority pupils' views of education and learning were gathered by Connect Research and Consultancy at a cost of £51,113.

Employers were invited to discuss their information needs. This research was conducted by MORI at a cost of £43,113.

The agency Cragg Ross Dawson was commissioned to discuss parents' information needs in respect of children's education. The cost was £58,985.

For £3,138, the agency Rosenblatt conducted evaluation of the Aimhigher Roadshow withYear 9 pupils at schools across England.

A pack to aid transition between Key Stages 2 and 3 was researched by Solutions Strategy Research, which cost £96,800.

The agency Carne Martin researched attitudes to implementing and promoting basic skills training to employers for £26,849.

Reactions to careers information and advertising about Modern Apprenticeships were gathered by Stimulating World Research for £58,444.

Educational Communications sought the reactions of children from 10–19 on the Science Year Pack and advertising for £43,181.

For £90,475, the agency Rosenblatt looked at current and potential communications media for young people.

In addition to the projects listed, the Department regularly commissions research as part of the development of advertising and publicity campaigns. Focus group and other market research into creative development work of this type are regarded as commercially confidential and therefore cannot be published.

The Department's website has details of its research programme (www.dfes.gov.uk/research). Information about focus groups and other forms of research commissioned by the Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally.

Free School Meals

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate she has made of the number of families not entitled to (a) income support and (b) income-based jobseeker's allowance who will be passported to free school meals under the new tax credits scheme. [77276]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Section 201 of the Education Act 2002 replaces Section 512 of the Education Act 1996, and anticipates that some families will move from income support and income based jobseekers allowance onto the new tax credits. If we had taken no action, they would have lost their entitlement to free school meals.

As was announced during the passage of the Education Bill through Parliament, we intend to make an order which will protect the school meal entitlement of around 100,000 children whose families will cease to receive Income Support and Income Based Jobseekers Allowance. It will also extend free school meals to an additional 89,000 children.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the arrangements will be for passporting families to entitlement to free school meals under the new tax credits scheme. [77277]

LEA Performances

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her estimate is of the number of local education authorities where performance has been found to be unsatisfactory; if she will list these authorities; and if she will make a statement. [75257]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Since Ofsted began its statutory inspection of local education authorities in 1998, 42 authorities have been found to be unsatisfactory. These are listed. Of the 27 LEAs that have been re-inspected at least once so far, and the findings published, Ofsted found that 26 had improved, and of these 21 were satisfactory.

Local Education Authority Funding

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list, by local education authority, the percentage of children receiving extra funding from (a) area cost adjustment, (b) other deprivation, (c) ethnicity, (d) income support and (e) sparsity funding. [77016]

Mr. Miliband: In the current education standard spending assessment system, additional funding for deprivation, area costs, and sparsity is allocated to each LEA according to indicators derived from an analysis of past spending patterns. It is not therefore possible to identify percentages of children receiving extra support for each of these characteristics.

Medical Schools

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what resources have been earmarked for research start-up in new medical schools. [77488]

Margaret Hodge: Higher education institutions themselves decide how to deploy the resources made available to them from the public purse. I understand some institutions have chosen to devote some of their share of the £1 billion science research investment fund to support new medical schools. Alongside this, the Department of Health has provided £4.25 million non-recurrent funding for NHS facilities to support research in the new medical schools in 2001–02, and is making arrangements to provide a further £9.25 million in 2002–03. From 2002–03 it is providing over £1 million in recurrent funding to mobilise NHS support for research at the schools. In addition, researchers at all medical schools and faculties of medicine are eligible to apply to the Medical Research Council for research funds. Awards are made according to their scientific quality and importance to human health.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list each target set for schools in England and Wales for each year from 1997–98 to 2001–02, stating whether the target set was achieved, and where the target was not met, what actions were taken by the Department for Education and Skills. [76583]

Mr. Miliband: Information about progress on PSA targets was published in the Department's 2002 Departmental Report in June 2002.

Latest progress will be reported in the Department's 2002 Autumn Performance Report to be published for the first time in November 2002.

Recycling

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action she is taking to encourage schools to promote recycling; and if she will make a statement. [77215]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Within the national curriculum, for example in Citizenship and geography, pupils learn about sustainable development, including the benefits of recycling.

Many schools are working in partnership with local authorities on recycling projects through Local Agenda 21, which is an action plan for achieving sustainable development at local and community level.

School Exclusions

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what powers she has to overturn the decision (a) to exclude a pupil and (b) to reinstate an excluded pupil; and what effect legislation enacted since 1997 has had on the powers of her office. [76778]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Secretary of State has no powers to overturn the decision to exclude a pupil and no powers to reinstate an excluded pupil. These matters fall to be determined at local level. In respect of exclusions and exclusion appeals legislation enacted since 1997 has not changed the powers of her office.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children have been excluded from (a) state primary and (b) state secondary schools in West Sussex at each of the key stages, in each year since 1997. [76872]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table. Information collected centrally on permanent exclusions does not record the Key Stage of the pupil; a breakdown of the figures by age is given as a proxy. Figures are not available centrally on fixed-term exclusions.

School Milk

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many primary schools provide school milk; and what proposals she has to reintroduce it in all schools. [77009]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department does not collect statistics on the provision of school milk. We do not have any plans to reintroduce free school milk, but the nutritional standards for school lunches, brought in April 2001, strongly recommend that drinking milk is available as an option every day.

Schools (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) pupils, (b) teachers and (c) support staff there were in each school in the Portsmouth, South constituency at the end of the 2001–02 academic year; and if she will make a statement. [76789]

Mr. Miliband: The latest available information is shown in the table below. This gives numbers of pupils as published in the Primary and Secondary School Performance Tables for 2001. Otherwise, school level information is not routinely published.

Secondary School Standards

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what progress she has made in improving standards in secondary schools in (a) England and (b) Wandsworth. [77287]

Mr. Miliband: We are committed to raising standards significantly in secondary schools. That is why we have set challenging targets for raising pupil attainment at 14 and 16. The GCE results for Wandsworth are currently not available, though we know nationally that over 51 per cent of 16-year olds-have achieved five or more GCSEs or GNVQ equivalent. This is an increase of 4.9 percentage point from when targets were first introduced in 1997/98.

In the case of 14-year-olds, there has been an improvement nationally of 1 percentage point in English and mathematics, while in science the large gains made last year have been consolidated. Provisional data for Wandsworth suggest that the number of 14 year olds achieving the standard expected at the end of Key Stage 3 has risen by 4 percentage points in English, and 2 percentage points in maths and science. This is good news, and suggests that our Key Stage 3 strategy has made an early impact on raising pupil standards in the early years of secondary education.

Technology Paper III

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance was issued to schools this year in respect of changes to the Technology Paper III exam. [77646]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 28 October 2002]: No such guidance was given by the Department. Guidance to schools on examination matters is the responsibility of the awarding body which offers the qualification.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions his Department has had with the OCR Board in respect of this year's Technology Paper III. [77647]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The Department has had no such discussions. Examination contents and assessment are the responsibility of the awarding body which offers the qualification.

Top-up Fees

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions she has had with university vice chancellors and principals about the introduction of top-up fees; and which universities have informed her of their intention to introduce top-up fees. [77682]

Margaret Hodge: My right hon. Friend and I meet university vice chancellors and principals from time to time in the course of normal business. We discuss a range of issues, and a number have raised the issue of discretionary fees.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the effect on access to higher education of the introduction of top-up fees. [77857]

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what evidence (a) from the UK and (b) from overseas she has assessed on the effect of top-up fees on levels of participation in higher education; [77750]

(2) what assessment she has made of the impact of top-up fees on improving access to higher education. [77751]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 28 October 2002]: We have announced our intention to publish a strategy document setting out our vision for the development and reform of higher education, including the outcome of the review of student support. The document will be published shortly; it would not be appropriate to pre-empt that strategy at this stage.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Beef Special Premium Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on what basis penalties are applied to claims under the Beef Special Premium Scheme 2001; and whether these penalties are equally applied to farmers in other countries within the Common Agricultural Policy. [77526]

Alun Michael: The Integrated Administration Control System sets down the penalties to be applied to the 2001 Beef Special Premium Scheme. These penalties are detailed in Commission Regulation 3887/92 (as amended). This regulation applies equally in all member states and compliance with it is monitored closely by European Commission auditors.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the appeal procedure regarding the Beef Special Premium Scheme in 2001; under what legislation it operates; and if she will list the names and legal qualifications of those who hear the appeals. [77527]

Alun Michael: There is not a formal appeal procedure for the 2001 Beef Special Premium Scheme. The Integrated Administrative and Control System Appeal Procedure, which was introduced on 1 April 2002, applies only to decisions made for the 2002 and subsequent scheme years. An internal customer complaints procedure is operated by the Rural Payments Agency, which is responsible for operating the scheme.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many appeals have been made regarding the Beef Special Premium Scheme 2001; and how many were (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful. [77529]

Alun Michael: There were 3,544 total refusals and 7,203 partial refusals of claims out of 102,495 which were submitted for Beef Special Premium Scheme 2001. Of these a small proportion have made representations to their rural payments agency processing site. A further 47 have made representations via their MP, and 55 have made customer complaints. In the majority of cases the original decision has been maintained because the European regulations governing the scheme do not allow for discretion to be applied where the conditions for claiming aid have not been met.

Breastfeeding

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking in response to recommendations from the UN Committee on the Convention on the Rights of the Child on measures to promote breast feeding and adoption of the International Code for Marketing of breast milk substitutes. [76402]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are fully committed to the promotion of breastfeeding, which is accepted as the best form of nutrition for infants. Under the NHS Plan, we have a commitment for "increased support for breastfeeding". As part of the Government's commitment to reduce health inequalities and increase breastfeeding rates, particularly among disadvantaged groups, a target has been set to increase breastfeeding initiation rates by 2 percentage points through the NHS priorities and planning framework.

The Department has undertaken several strands of work in promoting breastfeeding and will be further developed in the context of the children's national service framework. A total of 79 "best breastfeeding practice" projects have been funded across all regions. The aim is to increase the rates of breastfeeding, both initiation and duration among the disadvantaged groups. This is a goal shared by all sure start initiatives and several health action zone programmes.

Other related Department activities include support for an annual National Breastfeeding Awareness Week, that aims to raise the awareness of breastfeeding through the NHS. The Department also has close links with the four main voluntary organisations involved in the promotion of breastfeeding and the UNICEF/ World Health Organisation baby friendly initiative. The Department also conducts research into breastfeeding through quinquennial infant feeding surveys.

Since 1981, the United Kingdom has publicly endorsed the International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes and all the relevant resolutions passed at the World Health Assembly. The Infant Formula and Follow-on-Formula regulations came into force on 1 March 1995 and they implement the EC Directive 91/321/EEC, which embraces the principles of the WHO Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes 1981. The regulations place statutory restrictions on the composition, labelling, advertising and export of infant formulae. By implementing the Directive, the Government have taken seriously their responsibility to protect infant health and are at present revising the policy lines on infant feeding. We will be giving full consideration to the United Nations Committee's recommendations on promoting breastfeeding.

Broadband (Rural Areas)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to encourage total roll-out of broadband in rural areas. [77848]

Alun Michael: The Government are setting up a new regional broadband unit, co-ordinated by the DTI. This unit will see a broadband expert located in each of the English regions and the devolved Administrations. The experts' role will be to help stimulate the rollout and take up of broadband, including in rural and remote areas. This is part of the Government's strategy to meet their target for the UK to have the most extensive and competitive broadband market in the G7 by 2005. Defra is working closely with DTI in taking the rural broadband agenda forward.

EC Water Framework Directive

Mr. Bryant: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made in implementing the EC Water Framework Directive (2000/60/EC). [78378]

Mr. Morley: The Government have today published jointly with the National Assembly for Wales a Second Consultation Paper on the Implementation of the EC Water Framework Directive (2000/60/EC). This technical document, which is the second of three consultations, sets out how the Directive will be transposed into national legislation. I have placed copies of the paper in the House Libraries.

Flood and Coastal Defence

Mr. Bryant: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent reports she has received under her Department's high level targets for flood and coastal defence; and if she will make a statement. [78379]

Mr. Morley: During summer recess, we published three reports on the high level targets which are designed to assist in delivery of the Government's policy aims and objectives for flood and coastal defence. Copies were placed in the House Libraries. These reports relate to:
Target 2—Provision of flood warnings;
Target 10—Water Level Management Plans;
Target 12—Development and Flood Risk.
Target 2—Provision of Flood Warnings

This report follows the one published in May of this year and shows the following improvements since the last report was compiled: The percentage of flood warnings meeting target has risen by nearly 4 per cent. from 67.6 per cent. in April 2001 to 71.3 per cent. in April 2002.

The coverage of a direct flood warning system to properties in areas at risk of flooding has risen by 3 per cent. from 58 per cent. in April 2001 to 61 per cent. in April 2002. This is. an increase of some 57,000 properties. Since autumn 2000 a further 322,000 properties are covered by the flood warning arrangements.

Target 10—Water Level Management Plans

This report summarises the Agency's progress in developing and implementing Water Level Management Plans (WLMPs) on European sites.

Target 12—Development in Areas at Risk from Flooding

This is the first report published since PPG25 was introduced in July 2001 and is the starting point to consider whether these guidelines are working. PPG25 is due to be reviewed in 2004. Future reports will provide a clearer picture as the guidelines are embedded. In general, I am pleased to note that Environment Agency advice on flood risk developments is being accepted and followed by Local Planning Authorities (LPAs).

Fuel Poverty

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) single pensioners, (b) older couples and (c) families with children are recognised as fuel poor; and what the figures were in each year since 1997. [77450]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers in fuel poverty in England in 1998 were published jointly by DTI and DEFRA in August 2001 and in the UK Fuel Poverty Strategy published in November 2001. They are available on the DTI website at:
http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/consumers/fuel—poverty/1998estimates—england.pdf

It is estimated that in 1998 there were (a) 1.2 million households containing a single person over the age of 60, (b) 0.7 million households with older couples, and (c) 0.5 million households containing children in fuel poverty in England (based on income including Housing Benefit and Income Support for Mortgage Interest). When Housing Benefit and Income Support for Mortgage Interest are excluded from the definition of income, the figures become (a) 1.5 million households containing a single person over the age of 60, (b) 0.8 million households with older couples, and (c) 0.9 million households containing children in fuel poverty in England in 1998.

The 2001 English House Condition Survey will update this information and the information on the extent of fuel poverty in England generally. Results from this will be published in the update of the UK Fuel Poverty Strategy which should be published early in 2003.

Fuel poverty is a devolved matter and therefore it is for the respective Assemblies and Parliament to report on the situation in Wales, Northern Ireland and Scotland.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what procedures are in place to monitor the number of (a) single pensioners, (b) older couples and (c) families with children who are fuel poor. [77451]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's Fuel Poverty Strategy was published in November 2001 and sets out the proposals for monitoring the numbers in fuel poverty.

The monitoring of progress in tackling fuel poverty will be taken forward in two ways. Firstly the actual number of households in fuel poverty will be monitored, in particular for vulnerable groups such as pensioner households and households with children. Secondly, progress on the factors that affect fuel poverty (income, fuel prices and housing) will be monitored. These factors are referred to as indicators of fuel poverty and they include background information on issues relevant to those in fuel poverty. Together these two approaches should enable progress on tackling fuel poverty to be monitored.

In England, the monitoring of the actual number of households in fuel poverty will be carried out using information collected through the English House Condition Survey. Fuel poverty is a devolved matter and therefore it is for the respective Assemblies and Parliament to report on the situation in Wales, Northern Ireland and Scotland.

Import Controls

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assistance she proposes to support local councils with the additional expense of the increased regulations relating to the testing of food of non-animal origin at ports of entry. [75919]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that financing of import controls, including for the testing of food of non-animal origin, will be covered by a European Commission proposal for a regulation on official feed and food controls. This is expected in late November 2002. The Agency will consult on it with all its stakeholders. It will, in particular, work closely with local and port health authorities in considering the charging arrangements for import controls, including the option of full cost recovery.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost was to the UK for each of the past five years of the inspection of imports of food of non-animal origin. [75923]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that the information requested on the costs to the United Kingdom of inspection of food of non-animal origin is not held centrally. Local authorities have responsibility for the inspection of imports of food of non-animal origin.

Male Fish

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 23April 2002, Official Report, column 133W, on male fish, if she will make a statement on the outcome of discussions with the Environment Agency and the water industry regarding gender change in male fish. [77374]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Officials from Defra, the Environment Agency, and the water industry met over the summer to discuss implications of the jointly funded research published by the Agency on 26 March for sewage treatment processes. It was agreed that a joint programme of work, now under way, was needed to:

assess the applicability of results from the 10 UK rivers previously addressed to the wider UK aquatic environment; quantify the significance of endocrine disrupting pollution in UK rivers;

identify common factors between affected sites, such as key stretches of river, aquatic species, and major sewage treatment works (STW) implicated; and investigate STW technologies, including cost-benefit assessments.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 23 April 2002, Official Report, columns 133–34W, on male fish, if she will publish the findings of research into endocrine disruption in marine life; and if she will make a statement. [77375]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 October 2002]: A summary report of the 3-year research programme on endocrine disruption in the marine environment (EDMAR) is due to be published in November. I will place a copy of this and the full report of the programme in the House Library.

Some of the research outcomes from this programme, which was funded by DEFRA, the Environment Agency, the Scotland and Northern Ireland Forum for Environmental Research and the European Chemical Industry Association, have already been published in the scientific press and were presented at two seminars and in a series of newsletters.

The main achievements/findings of EDMAR are as follows:

the development of new methods for detecting endocrine disruption in marine fish and invertebrates; evidence of a slight decrease in one biomarker of endocrine disruption (egg protein production in male flounder fish) at some sites; signs of oestrogenic (feminising) endocrine disruption in blenny fish in some estuaries; very slight effects on migratory trout and salmon, suggesting that endocrine disruption from exposure to oestrogenic contamination in estuaries is not widespread in these species; and identification of natural and synthetic causal substances, the most important being natural and synthetic steroid hormones.

DEFRA will be discussing with other Government Departments and Agencies how to take forward the recommendations for further research resulting from the EDMAR programme.

Market and Coastal Towns

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on the funds made available by the Government for the Market and Coastal Towns initiative. [77531]

(2) when the Market and Coastal Towns initiative was established; what the criteria are for the awards given by this scheme; who decides how and to whom such funds should be allocated; and if she will list the grants made to whom and when they were made. [77532]

Alun Michael: As announced in the Rural White Paper, the Government made available £37million over three years for the revitalisation of small rural towns under the Market Towns initiative (referred to in the south west as the Market and Coastal Towns initiative). £32 million of this was channelled via the regional development agencies and £5 million via the Countryside agency.

It is for local town partnerships, using the Countryside agency's Healthcheck process, to draw up and agree action plans and for regional development agencies to approve individual projects. Detailed information on grants awarded is not collected centrally.

Organic Food

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what recent discussions she has had with the US Department of Agriculture over the US National Organic Programme and its implementation; [76252]

(2) what assessment she has made of the impact of the US National Organic Programme on UK organic (a) exports and (b) standards; [76253]

(3) what representations she has received in relation to the US National Organic Programme; and if she will make a statement. [76254]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 October 2002]: The Department has been in close touch with the USDA since the submission last year of an application for a determination that UKROFS' standards meet the requirements of the NOP. The USDA has now written to UKROFS to confirm that it accepts the UKROFS control system as sufficient to secure conformity with the NOP. This means that the UK organic inspection bodies are able to certify product for the purposes of the NOP but it does not affect the standards required to be met by products sold as organic in the UK. The Department has also been in close touch with organic certifiers in the US to ensure that the introduction of the NOP does not invalidate authorisations previously issued to import US organic produce into the UK. Discussions are also taking place between the European Commission and the USDA to ensure that disruption to trade between the Community and the US is kept to a minimum. We have received a number of representations about the introduction of the NOP from the UK organic inspection bodies and from companies concerned about the effect of the NOP on their ability to export to the US.

Rural White Paper

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much of the money available under Rural Transport Partnership was spent in 2001–02 and 2002–03 broken down by (i) date and (ii) county. [77083]

Alun Michael: The Rural Transport Partnership fund is administered by the Countryside Agency, which has supplied the following information for Defra. Funds are not allocated to specific geographic areas and the level of spend in each region is dependent on the applications approved. The allocation for 2001–02 of £6.89 million was overspent by £0.155 million. £10.35 million has been allocated for the whole period 2002–03. The spend until 24 October 2002 is £4.475 million. Figures at county level are not held centrally. The amount of money spent by region is shown in the table.

HEALTH

Children in Care

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many immigrant children have gone missing from social services care in each of the last five years; how many of these were suspected victims of trafficking; and if he will make a statement. [Transferred] [77331]

Jacqui Smith: Based on the information returned to the Department by local authorities, in 2000–01 the number of children that went missing from care for 24 hours or more was approximately 790. The majority of young people were missing for less than one week, while 2 per cent. were missing for over six months. Comparable data for previous years are unavailable, as prior to 2000–01, councils were only required to return data on children who were missing for more than seven days. Provisional data about missing from care episodes in 2001–02 will be available at the end of November 2002.

It is not possible to identify immigrant children from the above data. From 2002–03, councils will be returning statistics on unaccompanied asylum seekers. This information will be available in autumn 2003.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) chiropody and (b) podiatry new episodes of care per head of population there were in each of the NHS regions in each of the last three years. [76305]

Jacqui Smith: Information about the number of new chiropody/podiatry episodes of care per 1,000 population for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 by national health service region is shown in the following table.

NHS region	1999–2000	2000–01

From 1 April 2002 the NHS was reorganised with the establishment of strategic health authorities; the old health authorities and regional offices were abolished. Information about new chiropody episodes of care per 1,000 population is now available by Government Office regions for 2001–02 and is shown in the table.

Biological Attack

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on measures he has taken with regard to the availability of vaccines intended to protect the population against biological attack. [75386]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has contingency plans to deal with the deliberate release of a biological agent. These plans include stocks of antibiotics, antitoxins and vaccines, which can be mobilised rapidly. Specific details concerning vaccine stocks and their availability is not being made public as this information could be of use to terrorists.

Cancer Research

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money his Department has spent on research into (a) breast cancer, (b) lung cancer, (c) prostate cancer and (d) leukaemia for each year since 1997. [75792]

Ms Blears: It is not possible to give meaningful estimates of these figures, for two reasons. First, it is difficult to distinguish expenditure on research that is relevant to one particular tumour site from research on other or all cancers. Second, over 75 per cent. of the Department's total expenditure on research, including that on cancer, are devolved to national health service and details of these figures are not collected centrally.

We are tackling both of these difficulties. The National Cancer Research Institute (NCRI) is developing a database of research funded by NCRI members. Research projects are being classified according to the "Common Scientific Outline" system drawn up by the National Cancer Institute in the United States of America. This will enable all NCRI members to use the same system for distinguishing expenditure on research that is relevant to one particular tumour site from research on other or all cancers.

The modernisation of the NHS research and development funding system should enable a significant proportion of funds that are currently devolved to the NHS to be entered on to the NCRI database and analysed in a similar way.

Cancer Services

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how much money from the NHS Cancer Plan has been spent to date on cancer services. [75375]

Ms Blears: The Cancer Plan is being backed by a big increase in funding with an extra £407 million in 2002–03 compared with 2000–01. £76 million of this money was earmarked within national health service budgets for 2002–03 to ensure that investment gets through to the front line to be spent on the priorities for cancer services identified by doctors, nurses and other frontline staff. We are looking very closely at progress this year and Professor Mike Richards is working with chief executives of StHAs to ensure that the money gets through to cancer services and that Cancer Plan targets are met.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the totai cost of (a) prostate, (b) lung, (c) ovarian and (d) leukaemia cancer services was in each year since 1997. [75810]

Ms Blears: The Department does not collect figures on the cost of services provided by the national health service in a way that enables an accurate figure to be calculated for the cost of a particular disease. The cost of cancer care to the NHS has been estimated to be approximately 6 per cent. of hospital expenditure.

The Cancer Plan set out the Government's commitment that an extra £570 million would be made available for cancer services by 2003–04.

Care Homes (Closure)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the (a) number of residential care homes that have closed and (b) number of residential care home beds lost in Portsmouth, South in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [76489]

Jacqui Smith: Information is not available by constituency. The number of residential care homes and care home beds in Portsmouth unitary authority is shown in the table at 31 March for the years 1998 to 2001. Data for 2002 are not yet available.

Number of residential care homes and care home beds in Portsmouth unitary authority at 31 March, 1998 to 2001

As at 31 March	Care homes	Care home beds
1998	165	1,890
1999	165	1,850
2000	155	1,735

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement on the closure of care homes. [75363]

Jacqui Smith: Department of Health figures show that between 1997 and 2001 the most recent figures available the number of care homes in England reduced by only 640 or 2 per cent. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced, on 23 July, an extra £1 billion for social services by 2006. Some of this money can be used to boost capacity in the care home sector.

Child Care Workers

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary for Health what steps he has taken to improve the vetting of child care workers. [75369]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are committed to improving safeguards for children. They have enacted a raft of new legislation over the last few years, including the Protection of Children Act 1999, the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 and the Care Standards Act 2000. Together these initiatives establish a coherent cross-sector scheme for identifying those people considered to be unsuitable to work with children. They also ensure that when such people have been identified they are prevented from gaining access to children through their work.

Children's Trusts

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on children's trusts. [76338]

Jacqui Smith: Children's trusts provide an opportunity for delivering better services and outcomes for children and families. They will be based in local councils with power for the first time to commission health and social care. They will enable local partners to jointly plan, commission, finance—and where it makes sense—deliver services for children by putting their needs at the centre of policy. The first pilot sites will start from April 2003 and we will be seeking expressions of interest in December.

Chinese Community

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his action to support the care needs of older members of the Chinese community in London. [77630]

Jacqui Smith The national service framework (NSF) for older people provides local National Health Service bodies and councils with a template for raising the standards of health and social care and reducing inconsistency in access and service provision for all older people. The NSF and the ongoing project, Developing services for minority ethnic older people, provides specific guidance on how the needs of minority ethnic older people, including older Chinese people, can be effectively assessed and met.

Clinical Negligence

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what policies he has to reduce the human and financial costs of clinical mistakes in hospitals. [75374]

Mr. Lammy: We have established a broad programme of work specifically to address the important issue of patient safety and reduce unintended harm to patients.

The National Patient Safety Agency, established in July 2001, is a key part of this patient safety programme. The NPSA is already beginning to have an impact on the safety of national health service patient care. The agency will establish and run a new national reporting system to record adverse events and near misses in hospitals and primary care. It will promote a culture of reporting and learning so that lessons learnt in one part of the NHS are properly shared with the whole of the health service.

We are also targeting areas of known risk to patients. Work is under way on reducing medication errors, obstetrics errors and maladministered spinal injections. We have also commissioned a programme of research into aspects of patient safety which is under way at the University of Birmingham. [75374]

Community Involvement in NHS

Paul Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase community involvement in the organisation and delivery of NHS services. [75380]

Mr. Lammy: The Department will introduce new systems to build the capacity of communities and hard-to-reach groups, so they can influence the way the national health service works.

A new national body—The Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health— will be established during next year. Patients' forums will be set up in every NHS trust and primary care trust, to directly involve many thousands of people in the organisation and delivery of NHS services. They will work in local communities to promote involvement in local decision-making processes by generating interest and empowering people to get involved.

In addition, the Department has launched the Community Engagement Learning Network, a major organisational development programme designed to help PCTs throughout England engage with communities, patients, the public and staff in renewing and improving health services.

Day Surgery in Hospitals

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of day surgery in hospitals. [75378]

Mr. Hutton: Most patients prefer day surgery as it provides fast effective care and is the least disruptive to their lives. As part of the Day Surgery Strategy, we aim to make day surgery the usual way people have their planned operations not the exception, and increase to 75 per cent. the rate of elective operations undertaken as day cases. This is underpinned by £68 million that we are providing in 2002–03 and 2003–04 to improve access and deliver choice to patients in day surgery units.

Drugs-related Deaths

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died as a result of (a) smoking, (b) alcohol and (c) drugs, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [77050]

Ms Blears: It is estimated that smoking causes 120,000 deaths in the United Kingdom each year[1].

Estimates of deaths from alcohol range between 5,000 and 40,000 per annum in England and Wales, reflecting the wide range of methods of calculation used in many studies. The trend data requested is not available.

The available information on drug-related deaths is shown in the table.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug related deaths were caused in the last five years by (a) heroin, (b) crack cocaine, (c) cocaine, (d) ecstasy, (e) cannabis, (f) alcohol, (g) solvents and (h) prescription drugs; and how many people have used NHS services to treat (i) addiction to and (ii) the adverse effects of using each of these drugs in each of the last five years. Up to March 2001, the number of drug users in treatment with drug misuse agencies and general practitioners was around 118,500. Over the two-year period from 1998–99 to 2000–01, there has been a 16 per cent. increase in the numbers of drug users accessing drug treatment services. National health service trusts provide the majority of medical treatment services, while the voluntary sector primarily provides rehabilitation services. The great majority of drug users, 87 per cent., were receiving treatment within NHS services.

Information is not available centrally as to how many people have used NHS services to treat the adverse effects of using drugs.

Food Labelling

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to bring forward country of origin food labelling. [75387]

Ms Blears: Rules on origin labelling of food are set at European Union level. The Food Standards Agency has taken the lead in pressing for changes to improve the clarity and amount of information available to consumers particularly in relation to country of origin. In the meantime, the Agency has published advice to help enforcement authorities tackle misleading labelling.

General Practitioners (Recruitment)

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that in areas where there is a shortage of general practitioners that extra funding will be provided to aid the recruitment process. [75364]

Mr. Hutton: Funding to aid general practitioner recruitment is targeted at primary care trusts classified as being in under doctored areas, on the basis of the number of general practitioner principals, or equivalents, per weighted head of the population. The list will be reviewed and updated periodically.

Health Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made with setting up assertive outreach and crisis intervention/home treatment teams for mental health services in West Sussex; [78169]

(2) what monies have been made available for the development of mental health services in West Sussex; and what monitoring has been carried out by his Department to see whether funds made available for the development of mental health services in West Sussex have been used for that purpose. [78168]

Ms Blears: The earmarked funding included in the allocation for 2002–03 for investment in mental health was £1.112 million. In addition to mandatory cost pressures, over £800,000 of this allocation has been used for the provision of specific mental health services across West Sussex. There has also been additional commissioning of services not provided locally, such as high secure placements, amounting to £0.5 million. Monitoring is undertaken by the strategic health authority through the annual delivery agreement it has with the primary care trusts.

West Sussex Health and Social Care National Health Service Trust is developing plans for outreach, crisis intervention and home treatment teams as part of its adult mental health services strategy. Work is also progressing on the development of a crisis resolution service in Adur, Arun and Worthing with a view to the services becoming operational in April 2003.

Health Inspectors (Imports)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health inspectors are available to check imports through the ports of (a) Southampton, (b) Bristol, (c) Portsmouth, (d) Poole, (e) Weymouth, (f) Bournemouth Airport and (g) Southampton Airport; and if he will make a statement. [72521]

Ms Blears [holding answer 15 October 2002]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that responsibility for employing environmental health officers at airports and seaports rests with the local authorities which have responsibilities for port health work. The number of enforcement officers employed is determined by the local authorities. The numbers of such officers are not held centrally.

Health Service Finance

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the allocation of responsibility between a primary care trust and a hospital trust in the event that the latter incurs a financial deficit. [78173]

Mr. Hutton: National health service trusts should ensure they do not incur a financial deficit. However, the underlying cause of a financial problem and the identification of any remedial action necessary needs to be handled jointly between primary care trusts and NHS trusts and managed overall by the strategic health authority.

Hospital Acquired Infection

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress towards a reduction in hospital acquired infections. [75379]

Ms Blears: A number of actions are already under way to help reduce infections, and analysis of infection control returns shows improved performance over the last two years. However, further work is needed, and we are working with key stakeholders to develop a targeted action plan for health care associated infection as part of our strategy to combat infectious diseases.

Indebtedness

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what the level is of indebtedness of the North Wiltshire and Kennett PCT. [75357]

Ms Blears: Kennett and North Wiltshire Primary Care Trust started the current financial year with a range of financial pressures. These included the distribution of the liabilities of the former Wiltshire Health Authority, the share of underlying recurring deficits in providers within the strategic health authority area and a range of other cost pressures including primary care prescribing. As part of the assistance received from the NHS Bank, following the application by the Avon, Gloucestershire and Wiltshire Strategic Health Authority, the trust was allocated the second highest share of any organisation in the health authority area. The health authority will work with the trust in developing a three year recovery plan to address the underlying shortfall.

Integration of Health and Social Services

Roger Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what further steps he intends to take to promote the integration of health and social services. [75367]

Jacqui Smith: The Government intend to continue to support the integration of health services, with not only social services but all health-related functions of councils.

This month the Department of Health, working with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, will launch a new network to further support and promote joint working.

We have also recently announced our intention to pilot Children's Trusts. We expect as a minimum that these will bring together services from health, education and social care to deliver better co-ordinated services for children and their parents.

Kava-kava

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he intends to publish the conclusions of the Medicines Control Agency's consultation, MLX286, on the herbal ingredient kava-kava in unlicensed medicines; [78166]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Medicines Control Agency's consultation MLX 286 on the herbal ingredient kava-kava (piper methysticum) in unlicensed medicines; [78165]

(3) which herbal interest groups and organisations are participating in the voluntary agreement to withdraw products containing kava-kava from sale in the United Kingdom; how many have not agreed to the voluntary agreement; and if he will list the reasons his Department has received from such organisations for not participating; [78164]

(4) what discussions he has held with (a) the Medicines Control Agency and (b) the Food Standards Agency with regards to the proposals to prohibit the sale of products containing kava-kava in the United Kingdom; [78163]

(5) if he will make a statement on his position regarding the sale and use of the herbal ingredient kava-kava in herbal remedies and food products; [78160]

(6) what representations he has received from herbal interest groups with regards to the (a) voluntary agreement to withdraw the ingredient kava-kava from unlicensed medicines and food products and (b) the proposals to prohibit the herbal ingredient kava-kava in unlicensed medicines and food products; [78161]

(7) whether products containing the herbal ingredient kava-kava sold in the United Kingdom are comparable with such products sold in Germany. [78162]

Ms Blears: Following initial advice from the Committee on Safety of Medicines in December 2001 as to public health risk associated with medicines containing Kava-kava, a voluntary agreement between the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and the herbal sector to withdraw from sale medicinal products containing Kava-kava took effect at the beginning of 2002. In July the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) gave further advice, that there was evidence that in rare cases Kava-kava was associated with hepatotoxicity, which may be serious in nature. The CSM made the provisional recommendation that use of the plant should be prohibited in unlicensed medicines. The Government considered that advice and asked the Medicines Control Agency to consult on proposals to prohibit the sale, supply or importation of unlicensed medicinal products consisting of, or containing, Kava-kava except those for external use only. The proposals were set out in consultation letter MIX 286.

The consultation period has now ended and the Government have requested further advice on this issue, taking account of the responses to consultation, from the independent advisory committee, the Committee on Safety of Medicines. In addition, in accordance with the statutory procedure under section 62 of the Medicines Act 1968, the consultation responses have been referred to the Medicines Commission, who will report their findings and conclusions to Ministers. The Government will make an announcement once it has considered this advice and the Commission's report.

During the consultation period around 50 responses were received, with a majority of those commenting supporting the proposal. A number of the responses from the herbal sector advocated alternative options, in particular the continued availability of Kava-kava with voluntary inclusion of warning information for the purchaser or the continued availability of Kava but subject to restrictions, for example as to strength.

Over 20 representative organisations in the herbal sector or individual companies have at various stages notified the MCA of their participation in the voluntary agreement. In the period preceding the CSM's further advice in July, the MCA was aware that one company had withdrawn from the agreement on the basis of its view that there was insufficient evidence of risk to the public from Kava-kava to justify the withdrawal of the product, although it subsequently resumed participation. The current position is that the MCA is not aware of any relevant representative groups or organisations that have advised their members not to participate in the agreement. However, the national association of health stores notified the MCA at the end of July of their position that it was a matter for individual shops to check with their insurance companies to establish whether cover would remain in force.

The MCA has received a wide range of oral or written representations and views from the herbal sector relating to the voluntary agreement. The main points made by various parties have included: support for the agreement pending a decision on the future regulatory status of Kava-kava; disagreement or doubt that the strength of evidence of risk justified the agreement or its continuation; requests for an early decision about any regulatory action in order to resolve the position; and concerns over whether all parties were implementing or abiding by the agreement.

As herbal remedies may be supplied under section 12 of the Medicines Act 1968 without a marketing authorisation or any other form of notification to the MCA, a comprehensive record of Kava-kava products on the United Kingdom's market is not available. The MCA therefore requested information from the herbal sector about unlicensed remedies containing Kava-kava which had been on the market prior to the voluntary agreement. The information provided was insufficiently comprehensive to enable a detailed comparison with products on the German market. However, products listed by the herbal sector included ones similar to those sold in Germany, such as standardised extracts providing a daily dose of between 120 and 210 mg of kavalactones.

In relation to the position on food, since December 2001 the Food Standards Agency (FSA) has been advising against consumption of foods containing Kava-kava and encouraging industry to voluntarily withdraw these products from the market. In July 2002, acting on the advice of the chairman of the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment (COT), the FSA initiated a consultation on proposals which would prohibit the use and import of Kava-kava in foods. The consultation period has now ended and the FSA is considering the responses. Around 30 written responses have been received from a range of interested parties with roughly equal numbers supporting and opposing the proposals.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has had no discussions with the FSA on this matter. The FSA has no additional information to that outlined above on compliance with the voluntary withdrawal. The FSA does not hold information on the range of food products containing Kava-kava available on the German market.

Merging NHS Trusts

19 Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the merging of NHS trusts; [75370]

26 Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy for merging acute NHS trusts. [75377]

Mr. Hutton: Ministers will agree to proposals from national health service trusts to merge only if we are persuaded that such a merger is in patients' interests through supporting the delivery of the targets set out in the NHS plan.

Ambulance Services

20 Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the progress of ambulance trusts in meeting response time targets. [75371]

Mr. Lammy: The goal for ambulance service national health service trusts of reaching 75 per cent. of category A calls within eight minutes is more challenging for some than for others, but the Government remain determined that they all should meet it. While there is more to be done, the ambulance service nationally has made significant progress in recent years—in 1996 only one trust performed at the level indicated by current targets.

Strategic health authorities are responsible for managing the performance of ambulance trusts. Any trust not meeting its response time targets is required to produce a recovery plan in conjunction with their strategic health authority.

Bed Blocking

21 Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to produce final guidance on the proposed fine system to tackle bed blocking. [75372]

Jacqui Smith: We intend to bring legislation forward as soon as possible, including guidance to the national health service and social care about how the system of reimbursement will be administered, in relation to delayed transfers of care.

Mental Health

22 Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to increase the number of mental health beds in the NHS. [75373]

Jacqui Smith: Extra central investment enabled the creation of over 500 additional secure beds and 320 24-hour staffed beds by April 2001. There are also NHS plan commitments, which we expect to achieve, to develop 200 long-term secure mental health beds and 140 beds for dangerous people with severe personality disorder by 2004. The main thrust of our policy, however, is to develop community services that can safely treat most mental health patients without hospital admission.

Dentists

30 Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incentives are available to attract NHS dentists to work in areas of shortage. [75381]

Mr. Lammy: The Government are committed to modernising national health service dentistry. Over the three year period 2000–01 to 2002–03 over £125 million has been made available to the NHS to improve local services. In addition we introduced a scheme in April 1999 to encourage dentists to increase their NHS commitment.

Working with the profession and other stakeholders, the Department, through its Modernisation Agency, is planning shortly to test new models of providing NHS oral health care through the Options for Change programme, building on the learning already available from the personal dental services pilot projects.

Hemel Hempstead General Hospital

31 Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that financial considerations do not impede the restoration of maternity and paediatric services to Hemel Hempstead General Hospital. [75382]

Mr. Lammy: Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire strategic health authority has agreed with St. Albans Primary Care Trust and Dacorum Primary Care Trust that it will find the necessary funds during this financial year to establish and support the most appropriate model of care at Hemel Hempstead General Hospital. Further discussions are in progress about funding for next year.

Acute Services (East Kent)

32 Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made with the review of acute hospital services in east Kent. [75383]

Ms Blears: A judicial review of the consultation process undertaken to reach the recommendation on the reconfiguration, of acute services in east Kent is to begin in November. Ministers will need to wait for the legal process to be concluded.

Mental Health Bill

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received concerning the Mental Health Bill; and if he will make a statement. [76687]

Jacqui Smith: The Government published a draft Mental Health Bill and consultation document on 25 June. The consultation period ran for 12 weeks and ended on 16 September. We have received over 1,900 formal responses including letters from the public and hon. Members about issues raised in the Bill.

Mental Health Care (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the staff by grade and specialty in (a) the elderly care team, (b) the city team, (c) the rural team and (d) other categories in the Salisbury Mental Health Care team; and who funds each person. [77315]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mesothelioma Cancer

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of current available treatments for mesothelioma cancer; and if he will make a statement. [75388]

Ms Blears: A clinical guideline on mesothelioma cancer is being considered by the Department for referral to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. This would consider how mesothelioma should be diagnosed and managed.

National Service Frameworks

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the topics that are under consideration for future National Service Frameworks in the Health Service; and how they are selected. [76246]

Jacqui Smith: The national service framework (NSF) programme currently includes frameworks for mental health (1999), coronary heart disease (2000) the [national] Cancer Plan (2000), older people (2001) and diabetes standards (2001). The diabetes NSF delivery strategy is due later this year. Work is in hand on national service frameworks for renal services, childrens services and long term conditions. These frameworks amount to a significant programme of quality improvement across the national health service. We have no plans to amend the programme at present. The criteria for selection are set out in "A First Class Service".

Neuroscience Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of regional specialist commissioning groups in respect of neuroscience services. [77005]

Mr. Hutton: The future of regional specialised commissioning groups is being considered as part of the consultation on commissioning arrangements for specialised services for which responses are still coming in. I will be considering the responses and expect to reach conclusions on the way forward by the turn of the year.

Nursing and Midwifery Council

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on difficulties experienced by the Nursing and Midwifery Council in dealing with applications. [75366]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) was established on 1 April 2002 and inherited from its predecessor the United Kingdom Central Council its resources, systems and processes for the registration of nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Its establishment coincided with the installation of a new information technology system commissioned by its predecessor which has resulted in a backlog in dealing with new applications.

The NMC has taken action to resolve the issues including improving communications, targeting resources to tackle the backlogs and undertaking a review of systems and processes. I am advised that the NMC has cleared the backlogs in the UK applications and is continuing to target resources at registration applications from those qualified overseas.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the position of elderly residents who are obliged to seek alternative accommodation when nursing homes seek to re-register under a different status. [77987]

Jacqui Smith: If a care home is de-registered, councils should re-assess the needs of the home's supported residents for whom they are responsible to determine the best course of action, which may involve moving residents to another registered care home. In similar circumstances, self-funding residents may turn to councils for information and advice. Where self-funding residents cannot make their own arrangements, councils may make alternative arrangements for them under section 21 of the National Assistance Act 1948. When care homes are de-registered, there should be prior consultation with all relevant parties, including the residents and their families.

Older People's Taskforce

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 October 2002, Official Report, column 872W, on the older people's task force, if he will set out the reasons for each of the former members of the task force being replaced with new appointees. [76574]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 October 2002]: Mr. Harry Cayton resigned on taking up his post as Director of Patient Experience and Public Involvement at the Department.

Dr. Peter Melton, Mr. David Panter, Mrs. Beth Taylor and Mr. David White stepped down because of other pressing work commitments.

Mr. Chai Patel stepped down because he was no longer the owner of Westminster Healthcare and no longer had a direct interest in older people's services that qualified him to serve on the older people's task force.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement on the proposed changes to the Public Health Laboratory Services. [75366]

Ms Blears: We propose that many of the functions of the Public Health Laboratory Service should be incorporated into the proposed Health Protection Agency. The remaining functions—the laboratories predominately undertaking diagnostic microbiology services—will transfer to the management of local national health service trust by 1 April 2003.

Radiotherapy Waiting Times

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what the latest waiting times are for post-operative radiotherapy treatment; and if he will make a statement. [75385]

Ms Blears: Waiting times for radiotherapy treatment are not collected centrally. In order to tackle radiotherapy waiting times, we are making unprecedented investment in new radiotherapy facilities, streamlining care processes through the cancer services collaborative and working to best utilise the current work force and to increase the number of staff in post and in training.

Smoking

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the smoking percentage rates among women during pregnancy in each year since 1990 in (a) England and (b) each NHS region. [75638]

Jacqui Smith: Information on smoking in pregnancy is obtained from the infant feeding survey, which is carried out every five years; the most recent survey was in 2000. The results are not analysed by national health service region. The available information is given in the tables.

Table 1. Proportion of women who smoked throughout pregnancy/England, 1990,1995, and 2000

Percentage

Smoking prevalence	1990[1]	1995[2]	2002[2]
Smoked during pregnancy	28	23	19
Base number	5,413	4,956	[3] 4,921

Notes:
1. Data for 1990 relate to Great Britain.

2. The results from the 1995 and 2000 surveys are not directly comparable, since some of the smoking questions on the questionnaire were revised in 2000 to improve the reliability of the results.

3. The base for 2000 excludes 200 mothers who did not supply sufficient information for their smoking status to be classified.

Treatment for the Blind and Partially Sighted

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what steps he is taking to improve treatment for the blind and partially sighted. [75376]

Jacqui Smith: We have set a new target for the national health service to improve diabetic retinopathy screening. We have invested £20 million to modernise cataract services. At the same time, the Royal National Institute for the Blind is working with us to develop a resource pack for implementation of the Older People's National Service Framework. The National Institute for Clinical Excellence are also carrying out an appraisal of photodynamic therapy.

Waiting Times (A&E)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on waiting times in accident and emergency departments. [75384]

Mr. Lammy: Long waits in accident and emergency are not acceptable and improving patients' experience of emergency care is a Government priority.

The NHS Plan set the target to reduce the maximum wait in accident and emergency (A&E) from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge to four hours or less by 2004. By the time of the first milestone in March 2002, 77 per cent, of all patients attending A&E in England spent four hours or less in A&E. This slightly exceeded the milestone which was set at 75 per cent.

Wythenshawe Hospital

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will list the number of contacts his Department has had with (a) Wythenshawe Hospital and (b) Greater Manchester health authority concerning the case of Mr. Stanley Ford and list, in each case, the date and nature of contact. [76641]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Officials have been in contact with South Manchester University Hospitals National Health Service Trust and Greater Manchester Strategic Health Authority on a number of occasions since my hon. Friend first raised her constituent's case in five parliamentary questions last July. These approaches have been by letter, telephone and e-mail and not all were individually recorded.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations have taken place into hygiene standards at Wythenshawe Hospital following the outbreaks of MRSA in May and June. [76643]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Several meetings took place, attended by all relevant staff, including a consultant microbiologist and an infection control nurse. The trust's cleaning contractor was given instructions about additional cleaning requirements, with which it has complied. These enhanced cleaning measures are continuing to be monitored.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reasons why Wythenshawe Hospital was short of theatre staff on 22 March; how many staff were missing; what post each of them held; and, in each case, what the reason for absence was. [76645]

Jacqui Smith: [holding answer 24 October 2002]: On 22 March, five of the 20 nursing staff were on sick leave, although four colleagues worked overtime to compensate for their absence. It was as a result of an emergency admission going to theatre at 14:35 hours that my hon. Friend's constituent had to have his operation cancelled.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will investigate the procedures adopted by (a) Wythenshawe Hospital and (b) the Greater Manchester health authority when dealing with complaints about the treatment of Mr S. Ford of Warrington; and if he will make a statement. [76647]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 24 October 2002]: At the request of the national health service chief executive, the director of health & social care—North has reviewed Mr. Ford's case and the handling of subsequent complaints by South Manchester University Hospitals NHS Trust and Greater Manchester Strategic Health Authority. The director wrote to my hon. Friend on 18 September with his findings.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH OFFICE

Amina Lawal

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on Amina Lawal. [76991]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 28 October 2002]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) on 23 October 2002, Official Report, column 363W.

Arms Sales (Israel)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the sale of arms to Israel. [77510]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK arms trade with Israel is tiny. All relevant export licence applications are rigorously assessed on a case by case basis against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria, taking account of the circumstances prevailing at the time and other relevant announced Government policies. Our criteria clearly set out our commitment to take account of the risk that exports might be used for internal repression or external aggression. The outbreak of the intifada, continued Israeli incursions in the occupied territories and the Israeli breach of its assurance that UK originated equipment would not be used in the occupied territories have all been factored in to the Government's current export licensing policy.

Bali

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many consular officials there are in Bali. [77366]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 26 October there were 25 British officials (14 in the consular support team and 11 police family liaison officers) in Bali offering help and advice to those affected by the terrorist attack on 12 October. They are working alongside British-funded counsellors. We continue to monitor staffing requirements in Bali closely and will send more personnel as needed. A consular team will remain in Bali for at least the next three months.

Beef Supplies

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the beef supply contracts for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and its agencies are sourced from Scottish herds. [76813]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The FCO welcomes competitive offers of beef sourced from Scottish herds.

Bishkek Summit

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representatives from his Department will attend the Bishkek Global Mountain summit from 29 October to 1 November 2004. [77796]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 28 October 2002]: UK input will come from DFID staff based in Bishkek, who will be attending as observers.

Catherine Meyer

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between Baroness Amos and the hon. Member for Leicester, East concerning Catherine Meyer. [77367]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My noble Friend the Baroness Amos and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (Rosie Winterton) held a joint Ministerial meeting with my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Keith Vaz) and Lady Meyer, at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 22 October 2002, to discuss Lady Meyer's consular case. A number of action points were agreed.

Cuba

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Cuba regarding the incarceration and treatment of Juan Carlos Gonzalez Leiva; and if he will make a statement. [77053]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our Embassy in Havana raised Mr. Leiva's case last May with the Cuban Foreign Ministry. My noble Friend Baroness Amos raised human rights issues with the Cuban Vice-Foreign Minister during her visit to Havana in June.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the claims in the UN's Panel of Experts report on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources in the Democratic Republic of Congo that British Aerospace spare parts for Zimbabwe Defence Force Hawk jets were supplied to the DRC early in 2002 in breach of European Union sanctions on Zimbabwe; what information he has on the role (a) Mr. John Bredenkamp, (b) the Aviation Consultancy Services Company and (c) other individuals or companies played in mediating those deals; who granted the export licences; and if he will make a statement. [77983]

Mr. Straw: We are looking into the UN panel report. We take seriously any allegation that the UK or EU arms embargoes on Zimbabwe may have been circumvented. Any action in the UK would be a matter for the relevant authorities. We are aware of allegations of past arms dealing activities by Mr. John Bredenkamp. I am unable to provide the precise information requested by the right hon. Member under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received concerning claims made in the UN's Panel of Experts report on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources in the Democratic Republic of Congo that Aviation Consultancy Services Company represents British Aerospace; and if he will make a statement. [77984]

Mr. Straw: We are looking very closely at all allegations made in the report. Any alleged connexion between ACS and British Aerospace is a matter for British Aerospace.

Diego Garcia

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are in place to permit United States military forces to use the air base in Diego Garcia; and what consultations have taken place with the Ilois islanders from Diego Garcia over military use of their islands. [76216]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: HMG have entered into a series of bilateral agreements with the United States which allows the territory to remain available for the defence needs of the two countries for an initial period of 50 years. These agreements also deal with the establishment and functioning of a US defence facility on Diego Garcia. There have been no consultations on the military use of the islands.

Exports (Iraq)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the military exports to Iraq authorised for export since 17 March 1988. [75946]

Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

Details of all military exports to Iraq authorised since 2 May 1997 are published in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001 Annual Reports are available in the Libraries of the House.

For details of military exports to Iraq authorised between 1 January 2002 and 1 October 2002, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply from my right hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) on 21 January 2002, Official Report, columns 578–579W, and to the replies from my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) to my hon. Friends the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Mahmood) on 18 June 2002, Official Report, columns 296–297W, and the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) on 16 October 2002, Official Report, column 833W.

Friends of Scotland

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the events supported by UK embassies to promote the Friends of Scotland initiative in the past year. [77207]

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the events held in UK embassies to promote the Friends of Scotland initiative in the past year. [77206]

Mr. Straw: Diplomatic posts have hosted or supported the following events for the Friends of Scotland initiative:

22 January 2002--British Chamber of Commerce lunch in Hong Kong

23 January 2002--A business lunch in Guangzhou, China

25 January 2002--A lunch with the St Andrew's Society of Selangor,

Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

17 June 2002--A reception in Halifax, Nova Scotia

25 June 2002--A lunch in Amsterdam

14 October 2002 reception in Sydney, Australia

17 October 2002--A reception in Wellington, New Zealand

18 October 2002—A reception in Dunedin, New Zealand

20 October 2002-A- reception in Singapore

The Advocate General for Scotland gave an address at the event on 17 June. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland gave an address at each of the events in January and October.

India

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Indian authorities in the last six months concerning the case of Professor Davinder Singh Bhullar. [77949]

Mr. Straw: My Department has made no representations in the last six months concerning Davinder Singh Bhullar, but we are aware of his case. We understand that a final decision on Mr. Bhullar's appeal to the Indian Supreme Court is still awaited. Our High Commission in New Delhi will continue to follow the case along with EU partners.

Mr. Michael Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government encouraging the Indian Government to grant access in the Punjab to the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture; [77950]

(2) what representations his Department has made to the Indian authorities with regard to encouraging the granting of access to the Punjab by international human rights groups. [77951]

Mr. Straw: We have made official level representations to the Government of India for greater general access to India of UN Special Rapporteurs and international human rights NGOs, although not specifically for their access to Punjab.

We continue to encourage the Indian Government to ratify the UN Convention against Torture (CAT). My hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Mike O'Brien) most recently discussed this and a number of other human rights issues during his visit to India on 17 October.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions (a) he and (b) other Ministers have had with the authorities in India about the use of and removal of land mines in that country. [77952]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound) on 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 791W. This remains our position.

I warmly welcome the recent announcements of the Indian and Pakistani Governments to withdraw forces from their international border. I hope that further such de-escalatory measures by India and Pakistan will continue to reduce the regional tensions, and pave the way for a resumption of dialogue over Kashmir.

Iraq

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Syrian Government on potential British and US military intervention in Iraq; and what the policy of the Government of Syria is on the issue. [77023]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I met the Syrian Ambassador on 26 September. UK and Syrian officials in both London and Damascus meet regularly to discuss a range of issues, including Iraq. There is also frequent contact between our officials at regular UN meetings in New York on Iraq. The Syrian Government's stated policy is to work for a peaceful resolution of the Iraqi issue. Syria has called both for Iraq to comply with its UN obligations and for the immediate return of UN weapons inspectors to Iraq.

Jordan

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for the British Government to request the use of Jordanian airspace and territory for the use of their planes and ground forces for military intervention in Iraq. [77022]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

No decision regarding the commitment of United Kingdom armed forces to any potential conflict in Iraq has yet been taken. Military action is neither imminent nor inevitable. It is not helpful to speculate on the sort of assistance we might seek from states in the region in the event that military action became necessary.

Nigeria

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many hon. Members have made representations to him on the subject of alleged human rights abuses in Nigeria. [76990]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 28 October 2002]: During the last two months the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received more than 70 letters from hon. Members on human rights abuses in Nigeria. The majority of the correspondence has been about Amina Lawal, sentenced to death by stoning for adultery.

Pakistan

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of President Musharraf's ability to curb religious fundamentalism and terrorism in South Asia, with reference to the recent electoral success of religious extremist groups in two provinces of Pakistan. [77021]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We welcomed President Musharraf's courageous decision to join the international coalition against terrorism. In a speech on 12 January, he condemned all forms of sectarianism and religious hatred. He has also taken steps against militancy in Pakistan and banned five terrorist groups. Pakistan continues to be a staunch ally in the continuing campaign against al-Qaeda. We will continue to encourage Pakistan to sustain these efforts. It is too early to assess the impact the religious parties will have on Pakistan's policies. We have no reason to doubt Pakistan's continuing commitment to act against terrorism wherever it occurs.

Sikh Community

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will meet representatives of the Sikh community following the postponement of meetings on 6 August and 11 September, and for what reason the latter meeting was postponed. [77953]

Mr. Straw: My hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) had planned to meet a number of Sikh organisations on 11 September and was keen that the meeting should be with as broad a cross-section as possible of representatives of different Sikh groups. Many of our contacts were unable to attend on 11 September, and we therefore decided to postpone the meeting to another date. We hope to arrange a new date for a meeting soon.

South Asia

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the sequence of activities required to decrease tensions in the South Asian region. [77284]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary warmly welcomed the announcements by India to withdraw forces from the international border and Pakistan to withdraw forces from the international border and Line of Control. These are positive steps towards the reduction of tensions in the region. We hope that this will be followed by further de- escalatory moves on both sides that will lead to a resumption of dialogue between India and Pakistan. Only peaceful dialogue can lead to a lasting solution of the Kashmir issue.

Sudan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the level of abductions and slavery in the Sudan. [76987]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 28 October 2002]: There have been no new confirmed cases of abduction during 2002. The majority of abductions in recent years have been associated with the Government train to Bahr al Ghazal. We and our EU partners have made representations to the Government, urging suspension of the train until peace is achieved and an end to encouragement for armed horsemen (murahiliin) militias. The train has not operated this year.

Torture

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries the Government categorise as using torture. [76919]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Torture is inflicted on men, women and children in almost half the countries of the world. The UK believes that torture has no place in the 21st century and is therefore committed to combating torture everywhere. In October 1998 the UK launched an initiative to tackle torture throughout the world. Phase 3 of this initiative was launched in June this year. Over the four years of the anti-torture initiative the UK has established the reputation of having one of the strongest anti-torture stances in Europe. As part of the initiative the UK has been lobbying countries worldwide to ratify the UN Convention against Torture. Since our campaign was launched, 20 new states have ratified, bringing the total to 130. However, the Convention against Torture still remains the least ratified of all the UN human rights treaties.

Torture Allegations (Bahrain)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with the police investigation into the allegations made against a person whose name has been made known to him concerning alleged involvement in torture while Head of the Bahraini Security and Intelligence Service. [77528]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This is a matter for the Police.

Travel Warnings

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what methods of issuing travel warnings to British citizens are regularly employed in addition to notices on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website; and what change there has been in the use of each other method of issuing travel warnings to British citizens since the advent of the FCO website. [76691]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 1996 the FCO have published travel advice on the FCO website. The advice is accessed regularly by the travel industry and members of the public. Many regular users arrange to receive automatic updates when travel advice changes, by using the "automatic update facility" on the FCO site.

In addition to this service, those seeking travel advice can contact the Travel Advice Unit during working hours by fax or telephone. A further 30 organisations receive daily faxed updates from the Travel Advice Unit. Travel advice, covering countries and areas to which the FCO either advise against all travel or all non-essential travel, are also published on CEEFAX (page 474). Significant changes in travel advice are also announced via press statements. CEEFAX (page 471) gives contact information for the Travel Advice Unit, and the website address, from which comprehensive travel advice may be obtained. Our posts overseas have discretion to issue local advisories, with information and advice of particular interest to the expatriate community. This is disseminated in a variety of ways, depending upon local circumstances. In countries where we have a warden network we ask wardens to pass on significant changes in travel advice.

The FCO has gone to great lengths to improve and to maximise awareness of our travel advice. The Know Before You Go (KBYG) campaign, launched in June 2001, is a market transformation campaign made up of three main strands: the FCO website, strategic partnerships and PR. The key campaign message is simple and applies to everyone: know before you go—get travel insurance and check the FCO travel advice before you go.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Violent Crime

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the level of violent crime in the London Borough of Havering. [75107]

Mr. Denham: In 2001–02 there were a total of 3,947 violent offences in Havering.

It should be noted that recorded violent crime is not necessarily an accurate guide to trends in violent crime, as it is subject to changes in reporting and recording. For example, in the British Crime Survey, for England and Wales as a whole, the number of common assaults showed a statistically significant decrease of 24 per cent. between 1999 and interviews during 2001/02, whereas common assaults recorded by the police in England and Wales increased by 15 per cent. over the same period.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what affect the decision in the Ahmadi case has had on his asylum policy; and if he will make a statement. [75414]

Beverley Hughes: The ruling does not impact on our general policy regarding third country transfers under the Dublin Convention. Nor does it affect the operation of Section 11 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. The case impacts on the Secretary of State's power to certify human rights claims as manifestly unfounded where certain types of medical evidence are in issue. We are disappointed that the High Court took the view it did on the particular facts of this case. An appeal against the decision has been lodged with the Court of Appeal. The family's separate appeal to the Independent Appellate Authority has been listed for hearing.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to communications data, how many times (a) the Security Services and (b) each police force sought access to such data from communications providers such as Internet service providers in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [74482]

Bob Ainsworth: The Metropolitan Police made approximately 155,000 requests for communications date to be passed to them under the Data Protection Act 1998. Figures for each police force are not collected centrally. It is policy not to comment on the operational matters of the Security Service.

Accommodation Centres (Education)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what duties local schools will have to admit children living in accommodation centres. [76584]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I have been asked to reply.

Clause 35(2) of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill provides that a child who is a resident of an accommodation centre may not be admitted to a maintained school or a maintained nursery. However, clause 36 enables an LEA to disapply that provision and to arrange for the education of a child residing in an accommodation centre. In such circumstances the LEA may require the admission of a child to a maintained school, after consulting the school's governing body. However, the LEA cannot require the governing body of a school to admit a child if the child's admission will result in special measures to ensure compliance with the Secretary of State's limits on infant class sizes.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the teaching unions on his proposals to educate some children seeking asylum in accommodation centres. [76585]

Beverley Hughes: There have been no discussions with the teaching unions on the proposals to educate some children of asylum seekers in accommodation centres. However, officials in the Department for Education and Skills have established an advisory group with representatives from the Local Government Association (LGA) and the local education authorities in the areas where centres are planned.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to set out in law the role of the LEA in the delivery of education in accommodation centres. [76586]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I have been asked to reply.

Clause 35 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill specifies which LEA duties are not to apply in respect of children living in accommodation centres. Clause 36(3) empowers the Secretary of State to provide guidance to be followed by LEAs when using their power to arrange for the provision of education in accommodation centres. Such guidance can also offer further information as to the role of LEAs in the delivery of education for children living in the centres.

Asylum Applications

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on applications for asylum by individuals citing threats from a blood feud as a basis for their application; and if he will make a statement. [77245]

Simon Hughes: Applications for asylum in the United Kingdom are considered individually on their merits in accordance with the UK's obligations under the 1951 UN Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol. Unless the applicant may reasonably be expected to seek asylum in a third country or the Dublin Convention applies, asylum is granted where the applicant fulfils the criteria in the 1951 UN Convention.

Where an application is based on a blood feud, then we will assess whether the circumstances are knowingly tolerated by the authorities in the country concerned, whether they are unwilling or unable to offer effective protection, or whether the applicant could reasonably have been expected to seek the protection of the authorities, or moved to another part of the country where he or she would be safe.

Asylum Seekers

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet Scottish Executive ministers to discuss the impact of the Government's asylum policies on Scotland. [76911]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Immigration and asylum are reserved issues. The Under-Secretary of State at the Scotland Office my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mrs. McGuire) and I met the Scottish Minister for Social Justice (Margaret Curran) on 12 September; a further meeting will be arranged shortly. Home Office officials are also in regular contact with their counterparts in the Scottish Executive about the impact of the Government's asylum policies in Scotland.

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those who have sought asylum in the United Kingdom in each month in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 have come from Somalia. [77288]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is given in the table.

Note:

Information on asylum applications is published quarterly. The next publication will cover the third quarter (July to September) of 2002 and will be available from 29 November 2002 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Asylum Support

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics are held by (a) the National Asylum Support Service and (b) the Home Office Immigration and Nationality Directorate relating to the length of time asylum applicants have been in the UK before making an application for support. [76918]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 24 October 2002]: There are no statistics available on the length of time asylum applicants have been in the UK before making an application for support.

There is, however, evidence that a proportion of applications for asylum will have been made by someone who has been in the country for some time. Since a person cannot apply for asylum support until they have applied for asylum, it can be similarly inferred that this will also be the case for support applications

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children have been trafficked into the UK and forced into prostitution in each of the past five years; from what countries the children came; and if he will make a statement. [76798]

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children have been trafficked into the UK in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [76797]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: There is currently no criminal offence of trafficking. Criminal statistics which might give an indication of how many children have been trafficked into the UK in each of the past five years, and from where they came, are not therefore available. The Nationality and Immigration and Asylum Bill currently before the House will introduce a new offence of trafficking for the purposes of controlling an individual in prostitution.

Forming an accurate estimate of the levels of trafficking in people is problematic given the reluctance of the victims of trafficking to report to the police. There is currently no accurate, reliable data in existence within the UK or the European Union.

A Home Office research study 'Stopping Traffic' (Police Research Series 125, published in 2000) indicated that there was intelligence to suggest that some women and children are trafficked into the UK for the purposes of sexual exploitation. This was estimated at between 140 and 1,400 per year but it was impossible to make a more accurate assessment of numbers. The report concluded that there was no evidence to suggest that this was on a large scale compared with other European countries.

Correspondence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded delivery items addressed to Lunar House, 40 Wellesley Road, Croydon, are missing; and when he will reply to a letter from the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East relating to Mr. and Mrs. Ajaz Khan dated 1 September reference 18156/2. [76611]

Beverley Hughes: This information is not available. Items of recorded delivery post addressed to Lunar House, but not delivered, are the responsibility of the Royal Mail. All recorded delivery items received in Lunar House are logged into a computer database, together with a record of where in the organisation they have been sent.

I wrote to the hon. Member on 18 October about the case of Mr. and Mrs. Khan.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent performance of the Immigration and Nationality Department Board in answering letters from (a) hon. Members and (b) the public. [76738]

Beverley Hughes: Information on all correspondence received by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND), is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. IND received over 1 million pieces of correspondence during 2001–02, and systems are not yet in place to identify whether responses were given to all categories of correspondence received.

Figures will be available shortly on IND's performance in answering letters from hon. Members from 1 September 2002 and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as these are available.

We are developing measures to record and track all categories of correspondence. The Home Office Customer Communication Foundation Project was suspended last November and has now been replaced by a short term/tactical Correspondence Tracking System (CTS) Project to address the handling of correspondence and the provision of accurate management information. The project is due to begin on 1 November and will be rolled out for operational use over the coming 12 months. IND's ministerial, official and public correspondence are all included in the intended scope of the project. The CTS project is part of a raft of measures to improve IND's customer service delivery which will be developed over the coming year, in which customer communications will feature strongly.

Home Detention Curfews

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the home detention curfew period; and if he will make a statement. [78366]

Hilary Benn: On 5 February, Official Report, column 866W, the Government announced plans to lengthen the maximum curfew period from 60 to 90 days. Today we are presenting to Parliament an Order to enact that proposal. The Order will come into force on 16 December 2002, subject to the approval of both Houses. Eligible prisoners serving between eight months and under four years who pass a risk assessment will be released on Home Detention Curfew (HDC) to spend the latter part of their sentence at home for a period of up to 90 days depending on sentence length. There will be no change in the maximum curfew length for prisoners serving between three months and under eight months. They will continue to serve between 15 and up to 60 days on curfew. In all cases offenders not statutory excluded will be subject to a risk assessment and released on HDC only where it is safe to do so.

Under the HDC scheme prisoners serve the remainder of their custody period at home under electronic curfew usually from 7pm and 7am. At any one time we expect this measure will remove up to 600 prisoners from prison accommodation in addition to the 2,400 who are already on the scheme. The impact of these arrangements will be kept under close review.

Illegal Entrants

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal immigrants who were suspected victims of trafficking have been deported from the UK in each of the past five years; from which countries they came; and if he will make a statement. [76788]

Beverley Hughes: The number of people removed as a result of illegal entry action in each of the past five years is given in the table. I regret that the information requested on those removed who were suspected victims of trafficking and the country from which they came is not available.

Illegal entry action[1]	4,540	5,585	5,225	6,115	6,760

Of whom:
non-asylum cases	1,935	2,485	2,610	3,290	2,985

[1] Figures for 2001 have been estimated.
[2] Persons who had sought asylum at some stage. Figures exclude 200 dependants of asylum seekers removed as a result of enforcement action in the period April to December 2001; data on the dependants of asylum seekers removed have only been collected since April 2001.

National Confiscation Agency

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much money, attained through the proceeds of corruption in developing countries, has been confiscated by the National Confiscation Agency each year since 1999; [75074]

(2) what efforts are being made to channel money, attained through the proceeds of corruption in developing countries and confiscated through the National Confiscation Agency, back to the country of origin [75073]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: None. Since 1999, no sums have been realised by any of the criminal justice agencies from confiscation orders relating to corruption in developing countries. The Assets Recovery Agency, the body established under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 to investigate and recover unlawfully held assets, will not commence operations until early in the new year.

I should add that the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 also brings forward the point at which assets may be restrained to the start of a criminal investigation. At present, restraint is only possible when proceedings have or are about to be instituted which may be too late to prevent assets from being dissipated. The international co-operation provisions of Part 11 of the Act will also enable co-operation to be provided without the need to designate overseas authorities for assistance, enabling assistance to be given much more readily when cases arise.

In this context I should also note two new provisions which should assist in combating corruption in developing countries. Section 108 of the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001 ensures that foreign agents are covered by the law on bribery and corruption. Section 109 extends UK jurisdiction in respect of acts committed abroad by UK nationals and bodies incorporated under UK law which would amount to corruption offences if committed here. These provisions were brought into force on 14 February 2002. The confiscation provisions in the Proceeds of Crime Act will apply to these offences, following conviction of an offender where the offender has benefited from his conduct.

Arrangements exist for the UK to share sums realised on behalf of another jurisdiction following enforcement of an overseas confiscation order. As a general rule the maximum amount which can be shared with a requesting country is 50 per cent. of the sum realised once enforcement costs have been deducted. However, the UK is prepared in principle to return 100 per cent. (following deduction of recovery costs) of any assets that are the proceeds of corruption, and have been the subject of a confiscation order enforced in the UK courts.

In May 2002 a Department for International Development (DFID) conference was held to advise developing countries as to how they could seek assistance from the UK in investigating, freezing and confiscating assets of criminal origin which are believed to be located in the UK.

The UN Corruption Convention, currently under negotiation in Vienna, will also require all UN member states to address the issue of returning the proceeds of corruption to the country of origin. The UK Government is actively proposing, including in EU Common Position, that the UN Corruption Convention should favour the return of assets plundered from state funds by corrupt leaders.

Parent Abuse

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the policy pursued by his Department towards parents abused by their own children; [76889]

(2) what discussions his Department has had with groups representing parents who have been abused by their children. [76888]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Incidents of abuse are of huge concern to the Government no matter what the source. As a civilised society we must have the determination to confront abuse wherever it occurs.

As part of our integrated approach to combating abuse we launched our guidance "No Secrets" on the protection of vulnerable adults in March 2000. Local authorities and other authorities had to develop their own locally based codes of practice and ensure that they were developed and implemented by 31 October 2001.

The Department has had no discussions with groups representing parents who have been abused by their children.

People Trafficking

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suspected victims of trafficking who have been deported have re-entered the UK in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [77335]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested on those removed as suspected victims of trafficking and the number who have re-entered the country is not available.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases his Department has granted leave to remain on an exceptional basis to victims of people trafficking in the last five years. [77383]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case files.

Race Equality (Scotland)

Claire Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will bring forward the Commission for Racial Equality's draft statutory code of practice on the duty to promote race equality in Scotland. [78367]

Beverley Hughes: The Commission for Racial Equality's draft statutory Code of Practice on the duty to promote race equality in Scotland has today been laid before Parliament.

The statutory Code of Practice will offer practical guidance to public authorities in Scotland on how to meet their general and specific duties to promote race equality. Once the statutory Code of Practice is brought into effect it will be admissible in evidence in any legal action, and a court or tribunal should take relevant provisions of the Code of Practice into account.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Abduction Unit

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, if he will make a statement on the number of people in the Child Abduction Unit. [77370]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Child Abduction Unit has, since 1992, operated from within the office of the Official Solicitor and Public Trustee. It has two full-time members of staff, a manager with seven years experience of this work and three additional staff to provide cover where necessary. A senior lawyer within the OS/PT office provides legal advice.

Court Service

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans she has to downgrade Cheltenham County Court; and if she will make a statement. [77045]

Yvette Cooper: The Court Service report, Modernising the Civil and Family Courts, published on 23 May 2002 set out a vision of a new business model for the civil and family courts. The aim is to increase the choices for people who need to use the courts; reduce social exclusion in the system of justice; and improve the use of technology in the courts to enhance service. Under the proposals Cheltenham County Court would become a part-time local hearing venue on the basis that, on average, it currently has hearings on fewer than three days per week.

We will be consulting on our proposals for the court network next year. During this period, the views of all those with an interest in the future status of Cheltenham County will be canvassed. The consultation will include Members of Parliament.

Government Information (Disclosure)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will list the statutory provisions prohibiting the disclosure of Government information which have been introduced since May 1997. [77090]

Yvette Cooper: It has not been possible in the time available to identify all the relevant legislation containing such prohibitions. The Lord Chancellor will report in November on progress of the Government's review of all legislation which prohibits disclosure of information. I will write to the hon. Member with the information he seeks before then and place a copy of my reply in the library of the House.

Halloran v. Delaney

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make statement on the case of Halloran v. Delaney and its effect on funding personal injury cases. [76931]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We are considering the implications of this Court of Appeal judgment and how it relates to the House of Lords judgment in Gallery v. Gray. As the time limit for seeking leave to appeal to the House of Lords in Halloran v. Delaney has not elapsed it would be inappropriate to comment any further.

King Edward VIII

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will announce the result of his review of the status of papers relating to the abdication of King Edward VIII; and if he will make a statement. [77029]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on this subject on 11 June 2002, Official Report, column 118W. Any official papers relating to the abdication of King Edward VIII will need to be re-reviewed by Departments. It is hoped that the results of the review will be known and put into effect by the end of the year.

Knutsford Crown Court

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to make a decision on the proposed closure of Knutsford Crown court. [77092]

Yvette Cooper: Following the responses received during public consultation and our own meeting on 23 July, I have asked for careful consideration to be given to all the real concerns raised. I expect to be able to make a decision on the future of the Crown court at Knutsford early in the new year. In the meantime, I can assure the hon. Member that the building will remain as a Crown court centre.

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reason the decision on the planned closure of Knutsford Crown court has been delayed. [77093]

Yvette Cooper: Following the responses received during public consultation and our own meeting on 23 July, I have asked for careful consideration to be given to all the real concerns raised. Full and proper consideration must be given to all the facts before any decisions are made. The future of the court must be seen in context of the overall number of Crown court sitting days required in Wales and the North West of England.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Cash: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the name and date of closure of each magistrates' court that has closed since May 1997, by parliamentary constituency. [77278]

Yvette Cooper: Magistrates' courts are the responsibility of locally based Magistrates' Courts Committees (MCCs) and are a locally managed service.

Decisions to close individual courthouses are made by the local MMCs, with procedures for appeal. There have been 96 magistrates' courthouses closed since May 1997 in England and Wales, as set out in the table as follows. These have been listed in MMC area to which they belonged as information about which parliamentary constituency each MCC is a member of could not be obtained within the timescale. Mr. Cash: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates courts in (a) England and (b) Wales opened in each year since 1997. [77279]

Yvette Cooper: 14 magistrates courthouses have opened in the years 1997–2002 in England and Wales. Chippenham in 1997, Birmingham (youth), Southshields and Ashton under Lyne in 1998, Cannock in 1999, Hinckley in 2000, Southampton, Peterlee, Hull, Beverley, Bridlington, Kidderminster and Hereford in 2001, and Worcester in 2002.

PACT

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to assist PACT. [77369]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My Department will consider with PACT (Parents and Abducted Children Together) and other organisations how to improve awareness of the procedures involved in using the Hague Convention provisions.

Upper Age Bars

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reason people over the age of 70 are barred from (a) being magistrates and (b) jury service. [76127]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 21 October 2002]:

(a) The upper age for serving as a magistrate was set by Parliament after wide consultation and was generally supported. It enables individual magistrates to continue to make a contribution to the administration of justice for a long time.

(b) The Juries Act 1974 set the upper age limit for jury service at 65. This limit was later increased to 70 by the Criminal Justice Act 1988. The recent review of the Criminal Justice System by Lord Justice Auld, which considered the structure and representation of juries made no recommendation on increasing the upper age limit for jury service.

SCOTLAND

Friends of Scotland

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if she will list her Department's staff members working (a) full-time and (b) part-time for the Friends of Scotland Unit, broken down by location of work. [77202]

(2) how many staff have been seconded from the private sector to work for the Friends of Scotland initiative since its inception in 2001; and from which organisations these individuals have been seconded. [77203]

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on which date the Friends of Scotland website was established; [77208]

(2) if she will list the (a) start-up and (b) maintenance costs of the Friends of Scotland website; [77229]

(3) what marketing her Department carried out on behalf of Friends of Scotland to promote the launch of the Friends of Scotland website; [77210]

(4) how many visits the Friends of Scotland website has received in each month since it was first established; [77209]

(6) if she will list the reasons given by organisations and individuals for registering their interest in the Friends of Scotland initiative, as submitted to the initiative's website; [77211]

(7) how many (a) organisations and (b) individuals have registered to receive e-mail updates from the Friends of Scotland website; and if she will list them by country of residence; [77213]

(8) how many e-postcards have been sent from the Friends of Scotland website in each month since it was first published. [77212]

Mrs. Liddell: The current Friends of Scotland website was established on 23 July 2002. The start-up cost was £62,623; the cost of subsequent maintenance and development to date has amounted to £4,711. The launch of the website was announced at a reception held in the Scotland Office on 23 July.

The website has received the following number of visits in each month since it was established:

	Number of visits
July	826
August	2,046
September	3,261
October (up to 24)	3,451

The website has attracted 32 registrations of interest since its inception. Individuals registering their own interest and those registering on behalf of an organisation cannot be differentiated. The breakdown of the total by country of residence is as follows:

	Number
UK	20
Australia	3
New Zealand	2
Canada	1
Japan	1
USA	2
Belgium	1
Germany	1
unknown	1

Those registering their names have cited interests in culture, education and business.

Miss Melanie Johnson: Responsibility for monitoring the car pricing order and investigating allegations of anti-competitive behaviour lies with the Director General of Fair Trading.

His office is keeping the order under review.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take in the light of the House of Lords decision Customs and Excise v. Plantiflor Ltd. [76299]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply.

The judgment of the House of Lords confirms the view of Customs and Excise that Plantiflor should account for VAT on delivery charges as part of the total price of the goods it supplies. On 20 August 2002 Customs and Excise issued business brief (number 23/2002) which gives full background details on the issue and provides guidance on action to be taken by all affected businesses. It is available in the Library of the House and can also be accessed from the Central Office of Information website at: www.nds.coi.gov.uk.

Doorstep Selling

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the number of energy companies using doorstep selling to encourage people to switch companies; and what plans she has further to regulate doorstep selling. [77291]

Mr. Wilson: Doorstep sales are used in a number of markets, including gas and electricity supply. Since the introduction of domestic gas and electricity supply competition, such sales have been a useful way of bringing the benefits of competition, particularly access to lower prices, to the attention of customers. Consumers are protected under the Doorstep Selling Regulations, which were enhanced in 1998, and are enforced by local Trading Standards departments. At present, the Government have no plans to introduce further regulation. Gas and electricity consumers are further protected by specific regulations in supply licences, which are the responsibility of the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (OFGEM). Where appropriate, OFGEM takes investigative and enforcement action against suppliers that breach these conditions.

(3) what recent discussions she has had with representatives of workers employed in the offshore oil and gas industry on the implementation of the European Working Time Directive in that industry. [77337]

Alan Johnson: The Horizontal Amending Directive (HAD) (2000/34/EC) entitles workers in the offshore sector to the full provisions of the Working Time Directive (93/104/EC). The HAD was formally adopted on 1 August 2000 and is required to be implemented by 1 August 2003.

I have met with representatives of the offshore oil and gas industry, on 5 September, and have agreed to meet representatives of the Inter Union Offshore Oil Committee (IUOOC) to listen to their views on the implementation of the HAD to workers offshore.

A forum, comprising representatives from all sides of the sector and facilitated by the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS), was set up to assist employers and worker representatives to reach agreement over the implementation of the HAD in the offshore sector. The forum was unable to reach agreement on many issues and DTI officials continue to hold discussions and correspond with those from both sides of the industry.

Mr. Wilson: The Quarterly Statements of Nuclear Incidents at Nuclear Installations include information on radioactive leaks of any significance.

The Statements are compiled by the Nuclear Safety Directorate of the Health and Safety Executive and have been sent to the House of Commons Library since 1977.

Petrol Retail Industry

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received from independent petrol retailers to investigate competition in the petrol retail industry; and if she will make a statement. [75136]

Miss Melanie Johnson: My hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Construction has received representations concerning competition issues in the petrol retailing industry during 2002. The Minister held a Downstream Oil Industry Forum in July to discuss in particular the issue of rural petrol stations. Small Business Service

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to hold a Small Business Week in 2002. [76824]

Nigel Griffiths: Small businesses contribute 40 per cent. to our GDP and together have an annual turnover of one trillion pounds. They employ 12 million people in the UK, which is around 55 per cent. of the private sector workforce, so we promote SMEs every week of the year.

The Small Business Service is sponsoring The Sunday Times National Small Business Week. This major event will take place at Earls Court Exhibition Centre London on 28–30 April 2003. The organisers describe it as "a true celebration of entrepreneurship", focusing on the day-to-day issues of running a small business, assisting them to gain more of a competitive edge with the final aim of increasing profitability.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the outcomes of the regulation summits held between the Small Business Service and key stakeholders, including the list of potential projects which it was agreed would be considered in greater detail. [76833]

Nigel Griffiths: The meetings enabled a useful dialogue with small business representative bodies and provided an opportunity for business representatives to feed their regulatory concerns direct to Ministers.

On 16 October, discussions were held on a number of issues of importance to small firms; in particular on alternatives to regulation, the small firms impact test, the small firms start up resource pack and DTI consultation.

Officials and business representatives agreed to work together on these important issues to deliver benefits to businesses right across the country.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made by the Small Business Service in identifying a possible system for assisting small firms affected by disaster, as outlined in the Government's response to the Small Business Council's second annual report. [76823]

Nigel Griffiths: The Small Business Service has researched the issues arising out of establishing such a fund and the potential form*(s)* of assistance given to businesses affected by disasters in England. The devolved authorities are responsible for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Officials have reviewed the scheme operated by the USA's Small Business Administration, which provides loans to financially viable enterprises in the event of such a disaster and considered the extent to which that model, or other models, would be applicable in England.

Work in this area is being reviewed in light of the announcement on 18 September 2002, by the Commission of the European Communities, of its proposal to establish a European Union Solidarity Fund. This fund is to be focused on giving immediate financial assistance to help the people, regions and countries affected by major natural, technological or environmental disasters.

Small Businesses

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she has taken to support small businesses in Romford. [76394]

Nigel Griffiths: Business Link for London, working with local partners including Havering Council, is the main conduit for the Government's support to Romford's 7,000 small businesses. The Business Link for London has helped over 850 of these in a wide variety of ways.

The BL services for small and medium sized businesses is available by phone,through the web, or through one of our 200 business advisors. These Business advisers work directly with clients to offer pragmatic advice in support of new and existing businesses. They help solve problems, ease the growing pains of success, or help take a business to the next level of its development.

Expert advice and support is provided in IT, Finance, Sales and Marketing, Human Resources, Design, International Trade, e-business. Supply Chain, Innovation,Franchising, Creative Industries, Manufacturing and more recently, Sustainable Business and Social Enterprise.

Within the London Borough of Havering, Romford's small businesses benefit from the Borough-wide distribution by the BLfL of regularly undated information oncurrent issues such as legislation changes, funded schemes and the availability of sector specific support.

ELSBC in conjunction with Havering Council and Natwest Bank has formed an alliance to run a programme of business support within the borough. This support consists of providing business counselling for people considering starting up new businesses in Havering, the provision of a 4-Day business training course and post-start counselling and mentoring. For the business counselling sessions, the counsellor will meet clients at two Havering locations—Romford and Harold Hill—with Harold Hill being subject to additional SRB funding.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she will take to ensure that small businesses are aware of their employees' rights; and if she will make a statement on recent related research by her Department. [76830]

Nigel Griffiths: In May 2002, the DTI published the report of its recent research into small businesses' awareness of employment rights, "Small Firms' Awareness of Employment Rights" in the Employment Relations Research Series (Report No. 14). This was placed in the Libraries of the House.

The research was conducted by the Small Business Research Centre at Kingston University. Overall this research showed that confidence levels of small employers about their knowledge of individual rights were low even though awareness of those rights was generally high.

The Department is acting to raise levels of awareness among small business. We have set up an Employment Information Advice and Guidance project in partnership with ACAS, and the Small Business Service. Starting with the changes introduced in the Employment Act 2002 the project will improve the ways that the information advice and guidance on employment rights is provided to employers and employees with a particular emphasis on the needs of small businesses. The work of the project benefits from the advice of a user group of representatives of employers and employees including representatives of the Small Business Council, the Federation of Small Business and the private business forum and representatives of the main advisory networks.

Information on these changes and on existing rights is also available on the DTI website www.dti.gov.uk/er. Small firms and other employers can also register with businesslink.org to receive e-mail updates on changes to employment law.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the reply, 17 October 2002, Official Report, c. 891W, on wind farms, when she expects the UK windspeed database to be available on the departmental website; and whether her Department is collaborating with the ODPM in respect of brownfield site availability. [77384]

Mr. Wilson: The UK windspeed database has now been made available on the DTI website at http://www.dti.gov.uk/renewable/windspeed/online.html

My officials are collaborating with the ODPM on revisions to planning policy guidelines concerning renewable energy projects. The final planning policy statement should be made available in the first half of 2003 and will apply to all areas of England, including brownfield sites.

Information on brownfield site availability in England by region is contained in the ODPM Statistical Release BF-2002 of 12 September 2002, which is on the ODPM and National Land Use Database websites.

Planning Policy Wales (March 2002) encourages brownfield development wherever feasible. The Wales Planning Research Programme 2002–03 proposes further research on brownfield land following the completion of an earlier project, "A Feasibility Study to Establish a System for Monitoring the Supply and re-use of Previously Developed Land".

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will withdraw the option for a second runway at Birmingham Airport. [77098]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government intend to publish an air transport White Paper next year which will set a policy framework for aviation and airports in the UK over the next 30 years. In support of this White Paper we are consulting on a range of options, including the development of a second runway at Birmingham. We are inviting views on the arguments for and against providing different amounts of new airport capacity at different locations, including several options in the Midlands.

It is our aim to ensure that any development is sustainable and achieves a balance between economic, social and environmental considerations. All responses received will be considered carefully before taking any final decisions on the policies for the White Paper.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of (a) the viability of and (b) the need for lengthening the existing runway at Birmingham Airport. [77099]

Mr. Jamieson: Our background studies identified airport capacity constraints in the Midlands before 2030. Therefore, we have considered options for development at Birmingham International Airport, on which we are currently consulting.

Southend on Sea and Hastings have completed all the training and are due to commence operations shortly.

In addition the DVLA is giving free on-line access to the vehicles record to local authorities seeking information on keepers of those who abandon their cars. 200 local authorities have asked for this facility.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much it cost to redesign the Department's logo and subsequent changes to Departmental stationery and documentation following the name change from DETR to Department of Transport; and whether outside bodies were involved in the creative process. [78191]

Mr. Jamieson My Department has spent a nominal sum of less than 25,000, from within existing budgets, to make the required changes to the departmental logo, stationery, signage and web site design. Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive transferred to the Department of Work and Pensions (DWP) on 24 July 2002.

The former Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR) Public Service Agreement for 2000 set a number of targets for the Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive, and these are published in the former DTLR 2002 Annual Report. Progress against these targets is reported in the DTLR Annual Report on page 166.

Further information on progress against performance targets will also be included in the DWP Autumn Performance Report to be published in November.

Road Schemes

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many schemes are in place on motorways in the UK where use is allowed of the hard shoulder during rush hours; and what plans he has to increase this number. [76522]

Mr. Spellar: There are at present no instances of the hard shoulder being used during rush hours in England. A forthcoming project on the M42 (the Active Traffic Management (ATM) Project) will trial the use of hard shoulder running at peak periods and at other times to help reduce congestion. The trial between Junction 3A (the M40) and Junction 7 (the M6) and will be subject to rigorous safety requirements. WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Support Agency

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures are in place to ensure that an absent parent pays child maintenance; and what action is taken if they do not make the necessary payments. [74418]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mike Isaac to Mr. James Wray, dated October 2002:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent parliamentary questions about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive. I am replying on his behalf.

You ask what measures are in place to ensure that an absent parent pays child maintenance; and what action is taken if they do not make the necessary payments.

Where a maintenance application is actioned we will normally try to contact the non resident parent by telephone with a view to both obtaining the information that we need to make a maintenance assessment and reminding the parent of their maintenance responsibilities.

If all necessary information is not provided we will follow up in writing, at interview and then by taking criminal proceedings and / or by establishing an interim maintenance assessment.

If payment is not made and the non-resident parent is in employment we will usually seek to recover maintenance through the employer by a deductions from earnings order. If the non-resident parent is in receipt of certain benefits then we can make a maintenance deduction from there.

If payment is not made and the non-resident parent is self-employed we will seek a liability order through the Magistrates Court to establish the debt. We can then take proceedings which could include applying for a third party debt order, a charging order, bailiff action, removal of a driving license and for committal to prison.

Cold Weather Payments

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the outcome was of the annual review of the Cold Weather Payments scheme. [78550]

Malcolm Wicks: Following advice from the Meteorological Office, the annual review of the Cold Weather Payments scheme has now been completed. Amending regulations were laid on 10 October and will come into force on 1 November, in time for the beginning of the winter period.

In addition to the amendments necessary due to Royal Mail postcode changes, 10 postcode to weather station linkages have been changed on the advice of the Meteorological Office following representations made by hon. Members.

Cold Weather Payments are separate from, and in addition to, Winter Fuel Payments which are paid to eligible people from age 60.

I have written to each of the hon. Members affected by the changes.

2. HSC/E settlement figures represent expenditure net of income. Capital budgets are included.
3. From 2001–02 Government Departments moved to a resource based supply as part of the move to full resource accounting and budgeting (RAB). There is however a transitional period for 2001–02 to 2002–03 during which period certain expenditure (e.g. depreciation, notional capital charges) are to be dealt with as Annually Managed Expenditure (AME) and will not appear in the departmental expenditure limit (DEL).
4. The figures above from 1997–98 to 2000–01 are on a cash supply basis; and from 2001–02 on a resource supply basis. Additional budgets for AME budgets are shown separately.

HSE's projected budget (net of income) for 2003–04 is £216,727,000 plus £14,998,000 which would have been recorded against AME in the transitional period (total £231,725,000).

The Health and Safety Executive is empowered to undertake, on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission, any of the functions of the Commission as it is directed. It is also required to give effect to any directions given to it by the Commission. Section 11 of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 details the general functions of the Commission, which must be seen in the context of the general purposes outlined in section 1 of the Act. All of these functions may be undertaken by the Executive.

Maternity Benefits

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what benefits are available to individuals not entitled to maternity benefit because of an insufficient contributory history. [77854]

Maria Eagle: We introduced reforms in 2000 so that entitlement to Maternity Allowance no longer depends on the payment of national insurance contributions. Qualifying conditions for both Statutory Maternity Pay and Maternity Allowance are based instead on a woman's recent employment and earnings history.

Maternity Allowance is now paid to women earning at least £30 a week, but below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions (currently £75 a week). As a result, up to 16,000 more low paid women a year can receive improved financial help during their pregnancy.

Sure Start Maternity Grants, worth £500, are also available to help those mothers on low income in greatest need.

Pensioners Resident in Hospitals (Benefits)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will extend the lengths of time which elapse before benefits are reduced for a pensioner resident in hospital. [77852]

Malcolm Wicks: We have already announced our intentions to extend the length of time certain benefit recipients, including pensioners, may stay in hospital before their benefits are reduced. For these people the period will be extended from six weeks to 13 weeks and we hope to introduce this to coincide with the introduction of the State Pension Credit.

Widowed Spouses Pensions (Remarriage)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the loss of widows' and widowers' pension entitlement on remarriage. [77846]

Malcolm Wicks: Bereavement Allowance and Widowed Parents Allowance are available to both men and women of working age who are widowed. The predecessor benefits, Widow's Pension and Widowed Mother's Allowance, were available to women only up to a maximum age of 65. Entitlement to these benefits ends if a widow or widower remarries. This is because they are intended to provide financial support in widowhood and are designed to help the widowed spouse maintain him or herself and any dependant children in the absence of the deceased spouse's income.

If a widow or widower remarries they are treated, for benefit purposes, in the same way as members of any other married couple. Other social security benefits or tax credits may be available to help support the new family depending on their circumstances.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Strategic Investment Board

Valerie Davey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor's Strategic Investment Board's Annual Report for 2001–02 will be published. [78493]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Copies of the Strategic Investment Board's first Annual Report, covering the period from 1 January 2001 to 31 March 2002 have now been published. Copies are now available in the Library of the House and via the Lord Chancellor's Department's website at www.lcd.gov.uk. This provides full details of the Board's achievements for that period and its recommendations for future investment strategies for the Public Guardianship Office.

Job Location

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to her answer of 19 September 2002, Official Report, column 124W, on job location, what the reasons were for the reduction in combined funding for the UK and England World Class Performance from 1999–2000 to 2000–01. Sporting Facilities (London)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the adequacy of sporting facilities in London; and if she will make a statement. [77519]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has announced our intention to establish an England-wide database of sports facilities. Information on sports facilities in England is currently held by a variety of organisations, and a single database will enable more strategic Government investment in those areas and facilities which are most important. My Department is currently assessing the scope, content and cost of the proposed database and how the project will be taken forward.

Local authorities are key providers of sport and recreation and play a central role in the delivery of sport for local communities. "New Planning Guidance for Sport, Open Space and Recreation", issued by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, provides robust guidelines to help local authorities to plan positively for the provision and assessment of open spaces, sports and recreation facilities in their areas.

DEFENCE

Akrotiri SBA

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) representations were received and (b) environmental impact assessment was made concerning the decision to instal the antenna in the Akrotiri SBA, Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.[R] [77919]

Mr. Ingram: Representations about the decision to install the antenna have been made by the Government of the Republic of Cyprus, the Akrotiri Co-ordinating Committee, the Green Party of Cyprus, local authorities, non government organisations and major landowners within the proposed site and surrounding area.

An environmental impact assessment (EIA) of the likely environment impact of the project was undertaken in 1997. The EIA was updated in 2001. The EIAs were reviewed by an independent, international panel of experts from the Institute of Environmental Management and Assessment (IEMA), who found that there were significant deficiencies in the original assessment, when judged against today's best practice standards. They recommended that, in the event that a decision was taken to proceed with the project, we should adopt a comprehensive strategy to ensure that adverse impacts are avoided or, where this is not possible, reduced to the absolute minimum. The panel's recommendations were accepted in full and are being implemented.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alternative locations were considered for the new antenna installed on Akrotiri SBA, Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.[R] [77920]

Mr. Ingram: Consideration was given to locating the antenna elsewhere and a number of alternative sites were investigated. The alternative sites were judged unsuitable for technical reasons.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment was made of the likely impact on wildlife including migratory birds, of the new antenna at Akrotiri SBA Cyprus.[R] [77921]

Mr. Ingram: A team of experts under the supervision of the Ministry of Defence gathered data on wildlife as recommended by an independent, international panel of experts from the Institute of Environmental Management and Assessment (IEMA). This work was published in a Supplementary Environmental Work Report in June 2002. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House. Proposed mitigation measures have been implemented or are being progressed within a Ramsar Management Plan. Data collection is continuing.

The environmental work on migratory birds has continued beyond the publication of the Supplementary Environmental Work Report. The Ministry of Defence is currently collecting additional data. Survey protocols have been agreed between the MOD, Republic of Cyprus, and the IEMA Panel for day and night time flight line surveys to record the passage of birds through the proposed Pluto site, bird collision monitoring of the existing antenna and monitoring of the migration behaviour of Demoiselle Cranes. MOD and ROC staff have jointly staffed the surveys.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment was made of the possible impact on the health of the local Cypriot population of the new antenna installed at Akrotiri SBA, Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.[R] [77922]

Mr. Ingram: The possible impact of the new antenna on the health of the local Cypriot population has been considered carefully. It has been assessed that levels of electromagnetic emissions from the new system will be no greater than those from the system it will replace and will be well within EU safety limits. Following tests carried out last summer by its own experts and by experts from France, the Ministry of Communications and Works of the Republic announced that exposure of the public to electromagnetic radiation from the existing antenna on the Salt Lake is at least seventy six times smaller than the limit recommended by the European Union and that the installation of the new antenna is not expected to result in a significant increase in the level of emissions in the area. This confirms the results of our own assessments.

As a further measure of reassurance the two governments are carrying out a study into the health of the Akrotiri villagers. It is also our intention to set up permanent monitoring equipment in the village to confirm that emissions remain at the very low levels demonstrated in last summer's tests.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation was held with the Government of the Republic of Cyprus over the decision to build the new antenna at Akrotiri SBA; and if he will make a statement.[R] [77923]

Mr. Ingram: Extensive consultations have taken place between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Cyprus about the decision to build a new antenna at Akrotiri.

These consultations led to a joint statement in August 2001 by the two governments about the steps necessary to address concerns about the possible impact of the antenna on the health of the Akrotiri villagers and on the environment. The British Government has fulfilled the key undertakings set out in the joint statement.

Commissioned Officers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many commissioned officers are serving on (a) HMS Invincible and (b) HMS Illustrious; and if he will make a statement. [78296]

Mr. Ingram: As at 25 October 2002, there were 40 commissioned officers serving on HMS Invincible and 11 on HMS Illustrious.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) commissioned and (b) non commissioned officers are serving on ships in refit or not in service, broken down by ship; and if he will make a statement. [78299]

Mr. Ingram: Ships not in service are appropriately manned for their routine care and maintenance. Such tasks include essential daily safety check and preservation checks and low-level maintenance. In addition, during refit, these reduced crews support project managers working on board; to maintain equipment not contracted to be worked on during refit and to prepare ships for their return to fleet.

The numbers of (a) commissioned and (b) non commissioned officers serving on ships in refit or not in service, broken down by ship as at 29 October are:

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-commissioned officers are serving on (a) HMS Invincible and (b) HMS Illustrious; and if he will make a statement. [78298]

Mr. Ingram: As at 25 October 2002, there were 104 non-commissioned officers (Senior Rates) serving on HMS Invincible and 50 on HMS Illustrious.

Defence Fire Service

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members there are of the Defence Fire Service; and what equipment introduced in the last 10 years it has at its disposal. [77501]

Mr. Ingram: The current personnel establishment figure for the Defence Fire Service (DFS) is 1,300 covering all ranks. Precise details of current day-to-day manning levels are not held centrally as personnel below the officer grades are locally recruited.

The DFS, established at military airfields and bases where specific fire protection is required, is equipped with modern fire fighting apparatus and rescue vehicles, a significant proportion of which has been introduced within the last 10 years

Exercise Arrcade Fusion

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the forthcoming ARRC's exercise Arrcade Fusion in Germany. [77868]

Mr. Ingram: HQ Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps (ARRC) is holding its annual major Command Post Exercise, Arrcade Fusion, from 4 to 14 November 2002 at Javelin Barracks, Elmpt and Sennelager Training Centre. Personnel from 17 NATO Allies will take part. This is the first major exercise that HQ ARRC has conducted since it was endorsed by NATO's Military Committee as the first of the new NATO High Readiness Force (Land) Headquarters.

General Surgeons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many general surgeons are available to the (a) RAF, (b) Army and (c) Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement. [78282]

Dr. Moonie: As at 1 October 2002, there were 11 General Surgeon consultants in the Royal Navy, nine General Surgeon consultants in the Army, and two General Surgeon consultants in the Royal Air Force.

In addition, there were two Specialist Registrars within two years of qualifying as consultants in the Royal Navy and five Specialist Registrars within two years of qualifying as consultants in the Army. These personnel can be deployed, if necessary, as General Surgeons under supervision by a consultant.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many army personnel have been invalided out of the Army when deployed in (a) Sierra Leone, (b) Saif Sareea, (c) Afghanistan, (d) Kosovo and (e) Macedonia as a direct result of their involvement in the deployments; and if he will make a statement. L21 A1 Plastic Baton Round

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to respond to the recommendations of the Defence Scientific Advisory council on a review of the L21 A1 plastic baton round; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [77102]

Mr. Ingram: The review of L21A1 baton round performance after one year in service was completed and provided to the Sub-committee (SC) of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council (DSAC) as requested in June of this year.

The SC, DSAC have considered the review and have issued a statement, which is reproduced below. I am also placing a copy of the statement in the Library ofthe House. It concludes that there is no reason to amend the previous SC, DSACstatement that was placed in the Library of the House by my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 2 April 2001.

The SC, DSAC statement also notes that some attempts have been made to suggest that the committee consider the L21A1 to be more dangerous than the previous system. The statement refutes these suggestions and states clearly that it is the view of the SC, DSAC that the L21A1/L104 weapon system is safer than its predecessor.

DEFENCE SCIENTIFIC ADVISORY COUNCIL

Statement on the review by MOD of medical issues arising from use of the L21A1 Baton Round from June 2001–April 2002.

1. The statement of the Sub-committee (SC) of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council (DSAC) on the medical implications of the use of the new L21A1 Baton Round was placed in the Library of the House of Commons in April 2001. The statement compared the injury potential of the L21A1 system in public order role with that of the then current Baton Round, the L5A7.

2. The SC, DSAC requested that one year after introduction of the L21A1, the MOD should review perceived or quantitative changes in the frequency and nature of serious injuries from the system. The review was due in June 2002 and the SC DSAC received the report from MOD by the specified date.

3. The SC, DSAC considers that on the data available, there is no reason to amend the DSAC statement that provided the medical advice to Ministers. The SC, DSAC notes that from the available data there is no definitive or even indicative evidence that there is a higher frequency of thoracic impacts from the L21A1; thoracic impacts will occur occasionally in operational use.

4. The SC, DSAC requests that the performance and medical consequences of use of the L21A1 remains under review and that a further review is conducted by 31 July 2003, to consider the period 1 June 2001 to 31 May 2003—the first two years of operational use of the L21A1.

5. The SC, DSAC has noted some claims that its medical statement on the L21A1 has shown the projectile to be more dangerous. These claims appear to have arisen from taking elements of the statement out of context. It remains the view of SC, DSAC that the L21A1/L104 weapon system is a safer system than its predecessors, when operated in accordance with agreed guidelines.

Military Companies

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 540W, on military companies, how many private military companies he estimates provide forces for combat; and how many United Kingdom nationals in total he estimates are so employed. [77804]

Mr. Ingram: As I explained in my answer of 15 October to the hon Member, the FCO Green Paper entitled "Private Military Companies: Options for Regulation" published on 12 February 2002 highlighted the problem of defining a private military company. I noted that in practice, a wide spectrum of people and companies may be involved in the supply of military and security services. The Green Paper also notes that the distinction between combat and non-combat operations is not always clear. Companies may employ only a relatively small core of full-time staff and recruit personnel for individual contracts on a case-by-case basis. United Kingdom nationals could also potentially operate overseas on a freelance basis, but such activity is difficult to monitor. Given these difficulties, it is not possible to provide any meaningful estimates of the number of companies that provide forces for combat or how many United Kingdom nationals are so employed. The absence of any register of companies describing themselves as Private Military Companies further undermines any attempt to produce a meaningful estimate.

Military Medical Records

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action has been taken to ensure that vaccinations and preventive medicinal measures are properly reported on service personnel medical records; and if he will make a statement. [78276]

Dr. Moonie: It is Ministry of Defence policy that all treatments and vaccinations given to personnel are to be recorded on their personal medical records. Any treatments or vaccinations administered to personnel whilst they are deployed are recorded on their operational medical record and the information transferred to their personal medical records on return. All three Services have routine administrative procedures in place to check that the medical records of both Regular and Reserve personnel are both up to date and accurate.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether service personnel military medical records are available to their civilian doctor if requested; and if he will make a statement. [78278]

Dr. Moonie: The Service medical records of ex-Service personnel are available to civilian doctors if the individual serviceman or woman consents to their release.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances Service personnel military medical records are not made available to their civilian doctor when requested; and if he will make a statement. [78279]

Dr. Moonie: The military medical records of Ex-Service Personnel are not made available to the individual's civilian doctor unless the individual consents to their release.

NATO

Mr. Jenkin To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role NATO's Deputy Supreme Allied Commander Europe will play in cases where an EU-led crisis operation does not use NATO assets. [77816]

Mr. Hoon: EU-led operations without recourse to NATO assets and capabilities, planning and command requirements would draw on existing national and multinational headquarters available to the EU. The Operation Headquarters would be based on an existing national headquarters, such as the permanent joint headquarters at Northwood, augmented by officers from participating nations. NATO's Deputy Supreme Allied Commander Europe will be kept informed of the general progress of the operation. He would also co-ordinate responses to EU requests to NATO for planning support. These arrangements are subject to finalising agreement on modalities for EU-NATO co-operation.

Operation Fresco

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military units have had post-operational leave cancelled or postponed in order to provide personnel for Operation Fresco. [77930]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon Member to the answer I gave on 24 October 2002, Official Report, column 439W, to the hon Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr Simpson). Elements of the following five units have had post-operational leave postponed: 1 Royal Horse Artillery; the 1st Welsh Guards; 22 Engineer Regiment; 26 Engineer Regiment; and the Household Cavalry Regiment.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made to maintain ships taken out of service to release personnel for Operation Fresco. [77931]

Mr. Ingram: Maintenance packages are in place on all vessels involved in providing personnel for Operation Fresco. Fleet continues to closely monitor these ships and any additional measures necessary to limit degradation will be taken.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy ships have been taken out of service in order to release personnel for Operation Fresco. [77932]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Exeter, HMS Kent, HMS Lancaster, HMS Manchester, HMS Norfolk, HMS Newcastle and HMS Portland have had their operational programmes changed in support of Operation Fresco.

Royal Engineers

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on the PFI contract in respect of the Royal Engineers establishments at Chatham and Minley. [77933]

Mr. Ingram: We currently anticipate that a decision on the selection of Preferred Bidder will be made in January 2003.

Ship Crews

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships at sea on deployment have the full crew complement; and if he will make a statement. [78297]

Mr. Ingram: In meeting demanding manpower targets, the Admiralty Board has agreed Strategic Manning Priorities. These are reviewed annually.

Under current priorities only submarines are required to reach 100% manning whilst at sea on deployment. Currently, however, there are eight surface vessels and three submarines on deployment outside home waters that have full crew complements.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships at sea on deployment have a crew complement of more than five per cent. less than the full crew complement; and if he will make a statement. [78300]

Mr. Ingram: There are 37 surface ships and three submarines currently on deployment outside home waters. Of these vessels, 11 high readiness vessels have a full crew complement, 16 have a complement between 95–100% of their full complement, nine have a complement between 90–95% and two ships have a complement of under 90%. Of these latter two ships one has a total complement of eight and is one crew member short. The second ship, although on deployment doing valuable work, is at a lower state of readiness.

Suicide

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) soldiers, (b) sailors and (c) airmen have committed suicide in each year since 1972. [76672]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Centrally held statistics on suicides using consistent definitions are only available from 1984 onwards.

There have been 445 recorded suicides between 1 January 1984 and 31 December 2001 within Regular Armed Forces (including Gurkhas). There figures are based on coroners' (or Procurator Fiscal in Scotland) verdicts of suicide, and exclude self-inflicted deaths with open verdicts, accidental deaths or deaths due to misadventure. Figures from 1995 may change as there are a number of verdicts outstanding, and from 1999 changes to these figures may be significant. A breakdown by Service and by year is as follows:

Timber

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department is taking to ensure that the timber based board products and furniture is from legal and sustainable sources; and if he will make a statement. [78069]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence's policy on timber procurement is laid down in JSP 418, the MOD Environmental Manual, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Paragraph 4023 of JSP 418 states that all timber and timber products should be procured from sustainable sources.

The MOD has introduced a new condition of contract, which places an express contractual obligation on its suppliers to comply with the Government's policy on supply or consumption of timber and products containing wood, and, in addition, to supply data to verify that compliance.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Bushmeat

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assistance has been given to local authorities to educate residents of the dangers of illegally imported bushmeat. [75927]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

A campaign to raise public awareness of the dangers posed by illegal meat imports has been co-ordinated centrally by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. A variety of methods have been used in the campaign, including posters, leaflets, and radio fillers. Two Government information videos have just been produced. A leaflet on the importance of biosecurity has been issued to farmers. At the level of local authorities, in this financial year, Defra is funding jointly with the Food Standards Agency to provide additional training officers on import rules.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what local authorities are introducing smart card technology to improve access to and availability of concessionary fare schemes; and if he will make a statement. [77938]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

My Department is currently reviewing local authorities' plans to implement smart card concessionary travel schemes and has produced an interim list of existing and planned travel schemes.

Smart cards have great potential to help improve people's experience of public transport by facilitating through-ticketing and "seamless" journeys. In some parts of the country projects are already well advanced. We are organising "showcase" demonstration examples to promote their wider take-up, to encourage scheme integration and help put the UK firmly in the lead in this area. My Department is working closely with the Integrated Transport Smart Card Organisation (ITSO) to create common specifications for ticketing systems to ensure smart cards introduced in one area are capable of working with ticket machines in other areas.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment has been made of the impact of the implementation of the Private Securities Act 2001 on local authorities' ability to control the activities of private clamping and towing companies; and if he will make a statement. [77334]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

The Private Security Industry Act 2001 will introduce for the first time effective regulation of the activities of those who clamp vehicles on private land. The Act provides for the compulsory licensing of all individuals involved in such activities. Licensing will be undertaken by the Security Industry Authority, which will work closely with local authorities and the police in ensuring proper compliance with the licensing requirement.

The provisions of the 2001 Act do not extend to the towing away of motor vehicles. We are, however, aware of the growing concern about towing activities and are currently consulting relevant bodies about the scale of the problem and what, if any, measures should be introduced to address it.

Private Security Industry Act

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what responsibilities under the Private Security Industry Act 2001 he plans to give local authorities; what funding will be given for these extra responsibilities; and if he will make a statement. [77332]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

The Private Security Industry Act 2001 places responsibility for licensing individuals in the industry with the Security Industry Authority (SIA). Section 13 of the Act allows the Secretary of State to devolve to local authorities some or all of the SIA's licensing functions in respect of door supervisors. After careful consideration of the issues, including the cost implications and practicality of any such devolution, the Government have decided that all aspects of the licensing of door supervisors should be undertaken centrally by the SIA. I advised the Local Government Association of this decision on 31 August. The SIA will be discussing with local authorities how best to monitor, at local level, compliance with the licensing regime.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the ability of local authorities to regulate the activities of private clamping and towing companies; and if he will make a statement. [77333]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: I have been asked to reply.

Local authorities do not have any statutory powers to regulate operators who clamp and remove vehicles from private land, including car parks where the public has access. However, under the Private Security Industry Act 2001, the Security Industry Authority has been given powers to regulate all persons in England and Wales who immobilise vehicles in such places, in part because of concerns about the unscrupulous behaviour of some clamping companies. The authority is expected to begin licensing clamping operators with effect from late 2003.

The provisions of the 2001 Act are limited to the immobilisation of a vehicle by the attachment of an immobilising device, and do not extend to the towing away of motor vehicles. We are, however, aware of the growing concern about towing activities and, in view of this, we are currently consulting relevant bodies (such as the police and the British Parking Association) about the scale of the problem and what, if any, measures should be introduced to address it.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Bachelor of Education Courses

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will introduce a system of bursaries for four-year bachelor of education degrees equivalent to those available for students on post-graduate certificates of education. [77892]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to alter the support arrangements for students on Bachelor of Education courses, which remain the same as those which apply to other undergraduate students.

Education (Immigrant Children)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is on educating children of immigrants separately for the first months after arrival in order to have their needs assessed. [77801]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: All children, including those from migrant families, are given the same opportunities as other children to access education. The Department has no plans to provide separate education for the vast majority of children of immigrants.

However, a minority of children whose families seek asylum and are destitute may be educated in accommodation centres which will provide a complete package of support for the family. This education will be of the same breadth and quality as that delivered in schools and will be specifically tailored to meet their particular needs, including providing intensive support to help them learn English.

On arrival in the centre, children will receive an initial assessment which will cover such areas as previous educational experience and attainment, knowledge of English and any Special Educational Needs requirements. Teachers will monitor progress during the length of their stay and, on leaving the centre, will undertake a final assessment with information being recorded which will be available to their receiving school.

School Exclusions

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils were excluded from (a) primary schools, (b) city technology colleges, (c) other secondary schools and (d) special schools in each year since 1988; how many of these exclusions were taken to appeal; and how many of these exclusions were successfully overturned by an appeals panel. [76777]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table. Data on permanent exclusions have only been recorded reliably for the academic year 1995–96 onward.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

UN Convention on Rights of the Child

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many meetings officials have attended to discuss progress towards meeting the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (a) with organisations and Government departments within the UK and (b) with organisations in other countries. [78008]

Mr. Denham: The Children and Young People's Unit has lead responsibility for monitoring the UK's implementation of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Since March 2001, when the Unit took over responsibility from the Department of Health, officials have held the following formal meetings which include discussion of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child:

(a) Within the UK

Quarterly meetings with the devolved administrations

Bimonthly meetings of the Children and Young People's Interdepartmental Group

(b) In other countries

Twice yearly meetings of the EU Permanent Intergovernmental Group "l'Europe de l'Enfance"

In addition, the Unit holds ad hoc bilateral meetings both at home and abroad with lead policy makers on Convention issues. For example, there was regular contact across Whitehall in the preparation for the UK's second report to the UN Committee. Information about the precise number of such meetings can only be gathered at disproportionate cost.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment she has made of the UK's contribution towards achieving the goals of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child; and what representations she has received about the UK contribution. [78011]

Mr. Denham: The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) does not require signatories to work towards achieving certain objectives or 'goals', nor does it give enforceable rights to individual children. Rather, it imposes obligations on the State to "respect and ensure the rights set forth in the Convention to each child within their jurisdiction". Each signatory, therefore, is responsible for implementing the UNCRC in their own country.

The UK signed the Convention on 19 April 1990 and ratified it on 16 December 1991. It came into force in the UK on 15 January 1992. To allow monitoring of implementation, the CRC requires State Parties to report to the UN on their progress against the Convention 2 years after ratification, and every 5 years subsequently.

The UK's Second Report under the CRC was submitted by the Department of Health in 1999 and, due to backlogs at the UN, was only considered by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in June this year. A UK delegation comprising senior officials from across Government attended an oral examination in Geneva on 19 September. UK NGOs also submitted a report, and gave oral evidence. The Committee published its concluding observations on 4th October and this document, as well as copies of the UK's Second Report and a summary of the UK NGO reports have been placed in both Libraries.

The Government is under no formal obligation from the UN to respond to the report, but lead Departments across Whitehall, together with the Devolved Administrations, are considering how to take the Committee's comments into account. Although there are areas where we expect to take a different view from the Committee over our obligations under the Convention, we will consider its recommendations in developing our overarching strategy for children and young people, a development which the UN Committee welcomed. We will continue to involve the voluntary sector in this work.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Illegal Meat Imports

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assistance has been given to local authorities to educate residents on the dangers to livestock from illegally imported meat. [75926]

Mr. Morley: A campaign to raise public awareness of the dangers posed by illegal meat imports has been co-ordinated centrally by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. A variety of methods have been used in the campaign, including posters, leaflets, and radio fillers. Two Government information videos have just been produced. A leaflet on the importance of biosecurity has been issued to farmers. At the level of local authorities, in this financial year, Defra is funding jointly with the Food Standards Agency to provide additional training for enforcement officers on import rules.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what she is doing to encourage trading standards officers to prosecute those who trade in illegally imported bushmeat. [75930]

Mr. Morley: My officials have discussed with local authority officers on a number of occasions the circumstances in which prosecutions are brought against those importing meat illegally. We have made clear that prosecutions are an important aspect of deterrence which we would like to see used where there is clear evidence of a serious breach of the rules. We are willing to work with local authorities to produce further guidance if this would be helpful. In addition the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs is matching funding with the Food Standards Agency to provide additional training for officers from local authorities, including trading standards officers, on import requirements. One of the key aims of the training will be to raise awareness of the illegal meat trade and give officers advice on which cases should be prosecuted.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many penalties have been imposed on illegal meat importers since May. [76009]

Mr. Morley: According to data held on the Illegal Imports Animal Products Seizures (ILAPS) database, there have been 984 seizures of illegally imported meat from 1 May to 30 September 2002 inclusive. The penalty in 983 of these cases was destruction of the produce, and in the other the produce was re-exported. In addition, one successful prosecution was brought by Crawley Borough Council in July 2002 and six cautions were issued by the London Port Health Authority in October 2002.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement about the animal welfare standards in (a) pig and (b) poultry farms. [76959]

Mr. Morley: There is comprehensive legislation in place to protect the welfare of all farmed animals. In particular, the Welfare of Farmed Animals (England) Regulations 2000, as amended, include detailed requirements for pigs and laying hens. There are also species-specific welfare codes. Arrangements are in place to implement new EU directives on pig welfare and to update the existing welfare code. New codes for laying hens and meat and breeding chickens were introduced in July.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on banning the use of animals in circuses; and whether she will include a ban on animals in circuses in the new Animal Welfare Bill. [77492]

Mr. Morley: The proposed new Animal Welfare Bill will be an enabling measure under which the Secretary of State would be able to bring forward detailed proposals to regulate or prohibit certain practices in order to promote the welfare of the animals concerned. It is through this mechanism that any move to restrict or prohibit the use of animals in circuses would be made. This particular issue is complex, with strongly held opinions on all sides. Any decision on the future of animals performing in circuses would only be taken after the most thorough consultation.

Biosecurity

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many hours have been spent by DEFRA staff at UK air and seaports assessing biosecurity since the 2001 foot and mouth outbreak. [77538]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Staff from the State Veterinary Service, and Plant Health and Seeds Inspectorate carry out a wide range of duties at ports and airports. Information on the hours spent assessing biosecurity is not available. Since 2001, SVS staff have increased their surveillance work at ports and airports.

Bovine TB

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) minimum, (b) average and (c) maximum time taken to remove TB reactor cattle from farms in the last 12 months was. [76509]

Mr. Morley: For the 12 month period 16 October 2001 to 15 October 2002 the data requested are as follows:

TB reactor removal times for Great Britain and England

Area	(a) Minimum	(b) Average	(c) Maximum
Great Britain	0[1]	23.9	385[2]
England only	0[1]	24.7	385[2]

[1] Animal removed and slaughtered on day of TB skin test reading.
[2] Removal affected by FMD movement restrictions

Note:
The data in the table relate to samples from TB reactor cattle which were subject to bacteriological examination. Data for other animals slaughtered for the purposes of TB control are not available.

Further analysis of the data available has shown that 75 per cent. of cases were removed and slaughtered within 36 days of the skin test reading in Great Britain and in England; 90 per cent. within 45 days in Great Britain (47 in England); 95 per cent. in 56 days in Great Britain (57 in England) and 99 per cent. within 78 days (79 in England).

CAP

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on the European Commission's proposals in the Common Agricultural Policy's mid-term review to cap subsidies for individual farms. [75251]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 October 2002]: The Government's policy on the commission's proposal to cap subsidies for individual farms is that it goes against the grain of proposals that are intended to encourage increased efficiency. It would discourage rationalisation and modernisation and discriminate against efficient large-scale producers.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Government's policy is on decoupling of subsidies from production as part of the mid-term review of the common agricultural policy; and if she will make a statement. [75959]

Mr. Morley: We are in favour of decoupling in principle. It helps to reconnect farmers to markets, removes perverse incentives to environmental damage through overproduction and should contribute to a successful conclusion of the WTO development round and discharging our obligation to the poorest countries. However, there are a lot of issues to resolve before we can introduce a workable system.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if the Government aims to achieve real budgetary savings in the CAP as part of the mid-term review of the Common Agricultural Policy. [75246]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 October 2002]: The Government's view is that the Commission proposals for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy do not go far enough. We believe that agricultural expenditure should be reduced over time and that the mid-term review should provide for real budgetary savings.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's position on the place of modulation in the European Commission's proposals for the mid-term review of the Common Agricultural Policy. [75247]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 October 2002]: The Government supports a shift from production linked support to agri-environment and rural development measures. However, we do not believe that the Commission's proposals for achieving this through modulation go far or fast enough. In particular, the proposals would not deliver real budgetary savings which are necessary to put the CAP budget on a more sustainable footing. In addition, the Commission's proposal includes a franchise excluding very small farms and ceiling on payments to the largest farms which would be unnecessarily complex to administer, and could introduce distortions in farm structures.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Government's policy is on subsidised agricultural exports from the European Union with regard to mid-term review of the Common Agricultural Policy. [75250]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 October 2002]: The UK supports the commitment made by World Trade Organisation (WTO) members, including the EU, to "substantial improvements in market access (import tariff reduction); reductions of, with a view to phasing out, all forms of export subsidies; and substantial reductions in trade-distorting domestic support" as part of the current round of WTO negotiations (the Doha Development Agenda).

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will estimate the yearly costs of the Common Agricultural Policy to the EU budget over the next four years if there (a) is and (b) is not decoupling of subsidies from production in the Common Agricultural Policy. [75958]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission have forecasted the annual cost of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) to the EU budget until 2006, as set out in the table. These estimates assume the continuation of current policy and exclude expenditure on rural development. Without knowing how a decoupled payment system would work in detail any assessment of its impact of the EU budget would be purely speculative.

EU budget expenditure on CAP

	Euro million[1]
2003	40,420
2004	41,452
2005	41,265
2006	41,770

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on the Common Agricultural Policy with regard to the mid-term review. [75961]

Mr. Morley: We want to see a radical reform of the CAP, to secure:

(i) a shift in support from production-linked subsidies to environmental and rural development measures;

(ii) a significant increase in the UK's share of pillar 2 funding;

(iii) degressivity of direct payments, on an equitable basis;

(iv) support price cuts, especially for dairy and cereals and the relaxation of associated production controls;

(v) decoupling of direct livestock payments from production.

Correspondence

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, when she will reply to correspondence from the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton concerning Mrs. G. Gilbert, reference 163248. [70365]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 July 2002]: I regret that the Department has not been able to trace the hon. Member's correspondence.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she plans to answer the letter of 5 August from Mr Malcolm Bull of Kingston Bungalows, Ringwood. [76740]

Mr. Morley: A response was sent on 24 October.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Leominster, of 9 August, concerning R E Williams and Sons. [78439]

Mr. Morley: I regret that the Department has no record of receiving this correspondence.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the schemes and initiatives sponsored by her Department and its agencies which are not the subject of national roll out, showing (a) the authorities or areas covered by the scheme and (b) the budget of the scheme in the last year for which information is available. [75670]

Alun Michael: Given the range of responsibilities covered by Defra, such information is not easy to provide in the form requested. The information is being gathered and collated and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as this work has been completed.

Departmental Land (Throckmorton)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had and what expressions of interest she has received from parties relating to the purchase of land owned by her Department at Throckmorton; and if she will make a statement. [76262]

Mr. Morley: No discussions have taken place between potential purchasers and Ministers or DEFRA officials about the sale of land owned by the Department at Throckmorton and no formal offers to purchase all or part of the land have been received. However, agents acting for DEFRA have been approached by one party interested in acquiring a piece of the land. That party was advised that DEFRA is not able to consider disposals at this time but if and when the land was declared surplus to Government requirements, it would be sold for the best price achievable. Home Office officials have also indicated that there are matters they may wish to discuss with DEFRA officials.

EC Water Framework Directive

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what she is doing to ensure that river basin management plans under the EC Water Framework Directive will help to deliver the Government's commitments to sites of special scientific interest. [76385]

(2) what assessment she has made of whether sites of special scientific interests are covered by the provisions of the Water Framework Directive established for protected areas. [76386]

Mr. Morley: Sites of special scientific interest (SSSI) are covered by the provisions of the Water Framework Directive to the extent that they are also "protected areas" which have been designated as requiring special protection under specific Community legislation for the conservation of habitats and species directlydepending on water. These areas will include relevant Natura 2000 sites designated under the Birds and Habitats Directives. In addition, the improved management of the water environment to be delivered through the Water Framework Directive is expected to contribute to the water quality needs of SSSIs not designated under specific Community legislation. (76384)

River basin management plans will include maps which identify protected areas. Consideration is being given to include on such maps for information purposes all SSSI's, including SSSIs not designated under Community legislation. These maps would then provide a comprehensive summary of water quality related conservation objectives set at both Community and national level.

The deadline for meeting the water quality objectives established by the Water Framework Directive is December 2015 at the latest. Since the Government has a target to bring 95 per cent. of SSSIs into favourable condition by 2010, implementation of the Directive will not have a direct bearing on elivering the Government's commitment on SSSIs by 2010. However, in the long term, through its emphasis on a holistic, river basin based approach to water management, using water quality criteria based on ecological parameters, implementation of the Directive will benefit SSSIs

Egg Packers

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representation she has received from egg packers and their trading associations regarding the impact the absence of contracts between egg packers and supermarkets is having on the security of the egg industry for themselves and the producers. [77775]

Mr. Morley: No representation has been received directly from egg packers or their trading associations. However, letters have been received from the British Egg Industry Council and the British Free Range Egg Producers Association which raise this issue. These have been forwarded to the Office of Fair Trading, which has responsibility for the administration of competition law.

Flood and Coastal Defence

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what rules govern flood defence committees in the UK. [76122]

Mr. Morley: Under section 105 of the Water Resources Act 1991 the Environment Agency has a general supervisory duty over all flood defence matters. Section 106 of that Act requires the Agency to carry out all of its flood defence functions (except certain financial functions) through Regional Flood Defence Committees.

The current provisions relating to flood defence committees are contained in sections 14[en rule]19 of, and Schedules 4 and 5 to, the Environment Act 1995. These provisions include the composition of committees, the creation of local flood defence committees, boundary matters and proceedings and membership of committees.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list areas periodically affected by flooding which are not covered by current flood relief schemes or by schemes scheduled for completion by 2006. [76464]

Mr. Morley: At present, there is no list detailing areas not protected by flood relief schemes. Indicative flood plain maps published by the Environment Agency show areas of known risk, including those where the risk is reduced by defences. However the Environment Agency with Defra support are working on a Flood and Coastal Defence Database for England and Wales and a risk assessment that is developing zoned maps of these floodplain areas that will show the residual levels of risk with the current flood defences. These maps should be available to the public next year. Defra and the agency are also discussing with the Association of British Insurers the provision of such information for planned defences.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many houses have been affected by flooding in England and Wales in the past five years. [76462]

Mr. Morley: Approximately 15,500 properties are thought to have been affected by flooding from watercourses and the sea in the last five years. This figure will include properties that have been affected on more than one occasion.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many houses the Environment Agency assesses are at risk of periodic flooding. [76463]

Mr. Morley: There are approximately 1.8 million domestic properties in the indicative flood plain and which must therefore be considered at risk from periodic flooding from watercourses and the sea. However the vast majority of these properties are protected by flood defences.

Figures on internal sewage flooding from Ofwat suggest that 4,076 properties have a 1 in 5 risk and 10,856 properties have a 1 in 10 risk of being flooded by sewage. There are currently no figures available for external sewage flooding which affects gardens, highways or public open spaces, or from other sources such as highway drains and groundwater etc.

Fluoride

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what plans she has for the introduction of compulsory labelling of (a) food and (b) other products containing fluoride; [42974]

(2) for what reason labelling of products containing fluoride is not compulsory in the UK. [42976]

Mr. Morley: None. This is not a matter for this Department.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list instances where inoculation was authorised during the foot and mouth outbreak in lieu of culling. [77251]

Mr. Morley: There were no instances during the foot and mouth outbreak of 2001 where vaccination was authorised, although practical arrangements were made to implement a vaccination programme.

Hares

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs who the appropriate enforcing authority for the Hares Preservation Act 1892 is. [77347]

Mr. Morley: Under the Hares Preservation Act 1892 it is a summary offence to sell a hare or leveret between the months of March to July inclusive. The prohibition does not extend to foreign imported hares. The Act does not specify an enforcement authority. The usual procedure would be for an Information to be laid before Magistrates following which a summons would be served on the alleged offender. The police would normally lay an Information, following which the Crown Prosecution Service would take over the conduct of the prosecution from the police. Alternatively a case could be conducted by any other prosecutor such as, for instance, a local authority trading standards officer, or a private individual.

Hire Bulls

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many hire bulls are licensed in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales; and how many hire bulls are in areas that are TB tested every (i) six months, (ii) 12 months, (ii) two years, (iv) three years and (v) four years. [76514]

Mr. Morley: There is no requirement for hire bulls to be licensed in Great Britain and no central records detailing their geographical distribution. Therefore the detailed data required to answer the question is not available.

Horticulture Research International

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the future of Horticulture Research International. [77849]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 October 2002]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by me on 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 584W.

Integrated Coastal Zone Management

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on her policy towards integrated EU coastal zone management, with particular reference to Treaty base; what measures are planned under this heading; and what checks for subsidiarity have been undertaken. [77254]

Mr. Morley: On 30 May 2002, the European Union adopted a Recommendation concerning the implementation of integrated coastal zone management (ICZM) in Europe under Article 175(1) of the Treaty. The Government are committed to implementing this non-binding instrument which asks member states to develop national strategies for delivering ICZM through coordinated action at local and regional levels. There is no suggestion of a legally-binding European framework for ICZM.

Live Animal Exports

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimates she has made of the number of live animals exported from the UK for slaughter which are then returned to the UK for sale. [75474]

Mr. Morley: Statistics on exports of live animals for slaughter are available as are those on imports of various kinds of meat and meat products. Statistics linking imports of meat and meat products to animals which had been exported are not available. We are not aware of any animals exported from the UK for slaughter which have been returned to the UK for sale.

CITES

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions her Department has had with other governments which are party to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species to ensure that the proposal to list mahogany on Appendix II of CITES received the two-thirds majority required for the listing. [77580]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Officials from British Embassies and High Commissions have discussed the mahogany listing proposal with the relevant authorities in a total of 96 countries, including those in Central and South America. In addition, officials from my Department have discussed the proposal with officials of the United States of America and Brazilian governments to try to persuade them of the merits of an Appendix II listing. We shall continue lobbying in support of this proposal at the CITES Conference in Santiago next month.

Odour Nuisance

Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to give powers to local authorities to deal with odour nuisance from sewers and sewage treatment works. [78602]

Alun Michael: I shall shortly issue a consultation document setting out the available options by which we can achieve practical ways to deal with the problems of odour nuisance from public sewers and sewage treatment works. The possibility of giving appropriate powers to local authorities will be considered as part of the consultation

Pigswill

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what procedures are in place to monitor imported pigmeat products to ensure (a) that they have not been fed on pigswill, and (b) in cases where they have, that swill is prepared up to acceptable standards of safety and hygiene. [76304]

Mr. Morley: Imports into the United Kingdom of pig meat and other products are governed by European Community rules. These do not include procedures to determine whether pigmeat products have been fed on swill.

As regards pigmeat and pigmeat products imported from other EU member states, most EU countries have already introduced domestic bans on the feeding of swill. With effect from 1 November 2002 new EU rules on animal by-products will impose an EU-wide ban on the feeding of swill. These provisions are designed to prevent the spread of disease in live animals.

Pigmeat and pigmeat products imported from third countries must come from approved establishments in approved countries and must be accompanied by agreed veterinary certification. The veterinary certification confirms that public and animal health requirements for import have been complied with and ensures that imported meat is derived from animals free from disease, whether or not they have been fed on swill. It must also confirm that the meat is derived from animals which have been subjected to a veterinary inspection during the 24 hours prior to slaughter and showed no signs of disease. The meat is also subjected to post mortem veterinary inspection. Community regulations require that meat and meat products imported from third countries must be produced to standards at least equivalent to those applied to Community production.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proposals she has to compensate pig farmers who have invested in pigswill processing plant, buildings and equipment. [76312]

Mr. Morley: The Government does not intend to compensate pig farmers for changes to the feed material available for their livestock following the introduction of the ban on swill feeding. However the Government is providing free business advice to those affected by the ban.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the cost to pig farmers of the ban on pigswill. [76313]

Mr. Morley: A copy of the Regulatory Impact Assessment which accompanied the Animal By Products (Amendment) Order 2002 (S.I. 2001 No. 1704) is available in the library of the House.

Poland

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the transitional time to be granted to Poland following the country's forthcoming accession to the European Union in order to be integrated fully into the (a) Common Fisheries Policy and (b) Common Agricultural Policy; and the (i) fisheries and (ii) agricultural subject areas covered by that transitional period. [77645]

Mr. Morley: Negotiation of the Fisheries Chapter was provisionally closed with Poland in June 2002. A request from Poland to include sprat of the Baltic region in Annex IV of Regulation (EC) 140/2000 was agreed. Agreement on access to resources and catch quotas for all candidates is scheduled to take place shortly. Discussions on agriculture are still under way with all the acceding states, including Poland. No transitional arrangements have therefore been granted as yet. However, the offer agreed by the European.Council at its meeting in Brussels on 24 and 25 October includes certain transitional measures comprising an enhanced rural development programme, and a gradual phase-in of direct payments. This offer is expressly stated to be without prejudice to future decisions on CAP reform.

Recycling Targets

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the local authorities she has contacted regarding underperformance on recycling targets, and indicate how these local authorities were identified. [77454]

Mr. Meacher: We set targets in a way which meant all authorities would have to improve their performance over their rate in 1998[en rule]99, no matter what their starting point. For that reason, when tracking local authorities' recycling performance, we consider how much the recycling rate has increased, rather than looking simply at the rate.

I have written to the leaders of the local authorities listed about recycling. In these authorities, preliminary (unaudited) performance data for 2001–02, taken from 2002–03 Best Value Performance Plans, shows that the authority's recycling performance has decreased, stayed the same or only increased by 1 per cent. between 1998–99 and 2001–02. I have invited the relevant leaders to identify work that is already in hand to meet their 2003–04 Statutory Performance Standard for recycling and composting of household waste and to consider the need for further action where this is relevant.

Sheep Quota Purchase Scheme

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the (a) number of applications made, (b) the amount spent per application and (c) the number of animals removed through the English Sheep Quota Scheme in 2002. [76674]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The Sheep Quota Purchase Scheme (SQPS) opened on the 23 August and the tender does not close until 31 October, therefore the information requested is not yet available. To date 62 applications have been received, offering a total of 12,593 quota units.

Sustainability Summit

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Rob Marris) of 17 October 2002, Official Report, columns 898–900W, if she will list the stakeholders whom she met to discuss follow-up action to the Sustainability Summit in Johannesburg; and if she will place in the Library the papers produced for the meeting. [77387]

Mr. Meacher: The Secretary of State and I met the following stakeholders, along with representatives from the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, the Department for International Development, HM Treasury, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Cabinet Office, the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales:

Stakeholder
Jonathon Porritt	Chairman, Sustainable Development Commission
Maria Adebowale	Director, Capacity. SDC member, and member of UK WSSD delegation
Anna Bradley	National Consumer Council
Chris Fay	Chair, Advisory Committee on Business and Environment
Simon Mills	Corporation of London, Finance Initiative
Ian Russell	Chief Executive, Scottish Power
Neil Kinghan	Local Government Association
Sir Michael Lickiss	Chair, South West Development Agency
Neil Cleeveley	Trade Union SD Advisory Committee
Robert Napier	Chief Executive, WWF
Charles Secrett	Director, Friends of the Earth. SDC member
Derek Osborn	Chair, UNED UK. SDC Member
Andy Atkins	Tearfund. Co-chair, Development and Environment Group, British Overseas NGOs for Development

The purpose of the meeting was to hear the views of leading individuals on future priorities and actions at UK level, in the light of the conclusions of the summit. The meeting focused on three issues that emerged clearly from the summit as priorities for action at national level in the developed world: the role of business in delivering sustainable development; energy and, in particular, renewable energy; and sustainable production and consumption. No paper was produced for this meeting.

TB

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what targets her Department has set for the time it should take to remove from farms, cattle that react positively to the TB skin test. [76508]

Mr. Morley: There is a target of 10 working days for the removal of TB reactor cattle from farms.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of farmers suffering TB outbreaks in their herds have adequate isolation facilities in which to house infected cattle; and if she will make a statement. [76510]

Mr. Morley: Information on stock isolation facilities is not routinely gathered by Defra. When TB reactors or animals that react inconclusively to the TB test are disclosed, farmers receive verbal guidance on isolating those animals from the rest of the herd while awaiting slaughter or re-test. In addition, Defra has provided farmers with free guidance on reducing the risk of TB in their herds either by means of cattle to cattle spread, or from a wildlife reservoir.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans her Department has to provide financial assistance to farmers who need to improve biosecurity through new isolation facilities to cope with possible outbreaks of (a) TB and (b) other infectious animal diseases. [76511]

Mr. Morley: There are no plans to provide financial assistance to farmers to help them to establish new isolation facilities, either in respect of (a) TB or (b) other infectious animal diseases.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans her Department has to include TB test dates on cattle passports. [76512]

Mr. Morley: As a biosecurity measure Defra has advised farmers purchasing cattle to ascertain when the animals being bought in were last tested for TB. There are no plans to include TB test dates on cattle passports.

Twenty-day Rule

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cases of failure to obey the 20 day rule there have been, resulting in (a) fines and (b) warnings. [77303]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Between 11 February 2002 and 23 October 2002 the Animal Movement Licensing System identified 7,616 apparent infringements of the 20 day standstill, which were subject to investigation by the appropriate local authority. This compares with approximately 650,000 recorded movements over that period. Most of the apparent infringements are likely to have been minor, such as an incorrect address entered into the movement report. Where however, an apparent infringement is found to be a breach of the movement legislation in force, this is dealt with, in most cases, by means short of prosecution. This can include verbal or written warnings or requiring a farmer to obtain an Individual Movement Licence before moving livestock.

The information sought is not available in the form requested. In 2001 44 prosecutions were brought for offences under the Foot and Mouth Disease Order 1983 as amended. Provisional figures for the current year to end September indicate that 23 prosecutions have been taken.

Water Industry

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what the estimated output is of the smallest non-domestic water supply source which would produce a financially viable return; [76936]

(2) what assessment has been carried out of the smallest non-domestic water supply source which might produce a financially viable return from customers. [76937]

Mr. Morley: The Government published a consultation paper, on July 31; "Extending Opportunities for Competition in the Water Industry in England and Wales". This proposed competition only in the non-household sector, with an eligibility threshold of a minimum of 50 Megalitres (Ml) a year. The consultation period closed on 1 October and we are now considering responses.

In preparing the proposals, assessment was made of the broad cost breakdown between the main elements of the supply chain, the likely scope for making savings on these, and the ranges of charges paid by users. Experience shows that the market will determine financial viability in a competitive environment.

These issues will be taken into consideration as we balance the need to create opportunities for competition whilst continuing to secure the Government's wider objectives for the water industry, which include protecting public health, the environment, social and economic goals, and safeguarding services for household customers.

Wood for Good Campaign

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the objectives are of the Forestry Commission's support of the Wood for Good campaign. [77579]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 28 October 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 10 July 2002, Official Report, column 953W.

Agency Nurses (Worcestershire)

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost to the Worcestershire Acute Hospitals NHS Trust in 2002–03 to date of agency nurses; and what the cost was in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [77243]

Mr. Lammy: Actual costs to Worcestershire Acute Hospitals NHS Trust of using agency nurses are in the table.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being undertaken relating to the physical causes and treatment of CFS/myalgic encephalomyelitis; and if she will make a statement. [75135]

Mr. Lammy: The Department has two research projects in progress on chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis (CFS/ME). One is "Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME: Systematic Review", at the University of York, which started on 5 January 2000 and is on-going. Information from this has informed the Chief Medical Officer's (CMO) task force on CFS/ME on evidence-based guidance.

The other is "Cognitive Behavioural Therapy in Chronic Fatigue", at North Bristol NHS Trust, which began in August 2000 and is due to end in late 2004.

The main Government agency for research into the causes of and treatments for disease is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its funding via the Department of Trade and Industry. Following the publication of the CMO's working group report on CFS/ME, the MRC was asked to develop a broad strategy for advancing biomedical and health services research on CFS/ME. The MRC has appointed an independent scientific advisory group which includes scientists with expertise in such areas as epidemiology, physiology, immunology, infections, clinical trials, paediatric neurology and psychological medicine. The advisory group will draw on the working party report and recent expert views of the field. It will also take into account the concerns of patients and carers and the interests of consumers generally. Details of the advisory group and a note of the first meeting are now available on the MRC website, at www.mrc.ac.uk.

Association of Community Health Councils

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to announce his funding plans for the ACHCEW for the remainder of its term. [77429]

Mr. Lammy: The date of abolition for the Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales (ACHCEW) is yet to be determined. Officials will be discussing with ACHCEW the best way of funding the remainder of its term once that decision has been made.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on the ability of (a) community health councils and (b) the ACHCEW to retain staff of (i) the absence of a date for abolition, (ii) the decision not to allow community health council staff to transfer to the successor bodies and (iii) the absence of committed funding for the remainder of their term of employment. [77430]

Mr. Lammy: The Department is aware of the concerns of Community Health Councils (CHCs) following the announcement that they are to be abolished. There will be no automatic transfers into the new Commission either for CHC or Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales (ACHCEW) staff. The Commission is independent and fundamentally different from CHCs. As such it must be free to make its own decisions on staffing. Officials are working with trade unions to agree a human resources framework to support CHC staff in seeking suitable alternative employment. Progress is being reported through newsletters to CHC staff. CHCs will be abolished once the new system is functioning. The date of abolition for CHCs and ACHCEW has yet to be decided but we will make an announcement as soon as a date has been set. In the meantime the 184 CHCs continue to function and will be funded until their abolition.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what timetable has been set for the winding up of (a) community health councils and (b) the ACHCEW. [77428]

Mr. Lammy: Community health councils (CHCs) will be abolished once the new arrangements for patient and public involvement are functioning. There is no abolition date for CHCs or the Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales as yet, but we will make an announcement as soon as a date is set.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Community Health Councils will be abolished; and what support is being given to staff of CHCs in the transition to new arrangements. [78148]

Mr. Lammy: Community Health Councils (CHCs) will be abolished once the new arrangements for patient and public involvement are functioning. There is no abolition date for CHCs or Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales as yet, but we will make an announcement as soon as a date is set. Officials are working with trade unions to agree a human resources framework to support CHC staff in seeking suitable alternative employment.

Dental Care

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the complexity of the forms issued by the Health Benefits Division to be completed by students when reclaiming the cost of dental care; and if he will make a statement. [76955]

Mr. Lammy: The HC1 claim form has been carefully designed to collect all the information necessary from all groups, including students, to carry out a calculation of their entitlement to help with health costs, based on income support arrangements. People only need to complete the sections of the form which apply to them.

Dental Treatment

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the average cost of dental treatment by an NHS dentist and (b) the average cost of treatment at the new NHS drop-in centres being developed. [76245]

Mr. Lammy: The average gross cost for a course of dental treatment including patient charges in the general dental service (GDS) in England was £36.33 for adults in 2001–02. The average cost for a course of treatment for charge exempt adult patients was £53.61.

Comparable information for dental access centres (DACs) is not available and the pattern of treatment provided in DACs is not directly comparable to the GDS. Total revenue available for DACs in 2002–03 is £35 million. It is anticipated that around 300,000 patients will be treated in these centres during the course of this financial year. Final allocations will be adjusted to take account of the overall performance of each centre.

Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to raise the retirement age for general dental surgery principals; and what his policy is on retention of seniority payments for such principals. [76247]

Mr. Lammy: At present general dental services (GDS) principals are removed from dental lists on 1 April following their 65th birthday, but can continue to work as assistants, or privately. We plan to amend the GDS regulations to increase this age limit to 70 years at the next available opportunity, which is likely to be in the spring of 2003. Principals who continue to work beyond the age of 65 will retain entitlement to claim seniority payments in accordance with the conditions set out in Determination III of the Statement of Dental Remuneration.

Donor Cards

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people he estimates hold donor cards; and what measures have been taken since 1997 to raise awareness and encourage people to get donor cards. [77157]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 29 October 2002]: The latest Gallup Survey commissioned by the National Kidney Patients Association in 2000 indicates that 28 per cent. of the population carry a donor card. This equates to about 16.5 million people in the United Kingdom.

Since 1997 we have launched a number of publicity campaigns and initiatives encouraging people to join the national health service organ donation register (ODR), to carry a donor card, and to discuss their wishes with their relatives. Advertising on television, radio and press at time of launch was supported by public information leaflets which contain donor cards and forms to join the ODR.

The organ donation literature line, 0845 60 60 400, and the campaign website (www.nhs.uk/organdonor) complements and supports this activity as do very successful partnerships with the voluntary sector, the general practitioner surgery network, Boots, Goldfish and other banks, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority, the Passport Agency and GlaxoSmithKline.

In addition, United Kingdom Transplant's 2002 initiative with local authorities, encouraged people to join the ODR when they enrol on the electoral register.

The Department also runs two separate campaigns specifically targeting Asians and African Caribbeans as people from these communities are more likely to suffer from conditions that lead to kidney failure, resulting in a need for a transplant.

Duhenne Muscular Dystrophy

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the statement by the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Lammy) of 22 October 2002, Official Report, column 61WH, on Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy, how the £2 million on research into Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy in 2001–02 has been spent; and if he will make a statement. [77679]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 28 October 2002]: There are five research projects into Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy (DMD) funded by the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Trade and Industry via the Office of Science and Technology.

Four are led by Professor T. Partridge at the MRC Clinical Sciences Centre's Muscle Cell Biology Group. These are:

"Study of factors influencing repair and regeneration of skeletal muscle", which is investigating ways of enhancing the mechanisms that promote the normal regeneration of muscle and of counteracting the factors that inhibit the process in genetic disorders such as DMD;

"Investigation of fibrogenic mechanisms in dystrophic muscle", which is investigating fibrosis, a feature of chronic muscle trauma, which is implicated in the clinical decline of DMD;

"Identification of muscle specific promoter/enhancer regions of collagen 1 gene", which is looking for genes encoding collagen 1, because the accumulation of excess collagenous connective tissue is thought to play a part in the pathogenesis of DMD, and once the gene has been found, it is hoped that production can be reduced; and

"Investigation of the mechanisms that generate revertant muscle fibres", which aims to discover why people with DMD have an unusual production of dystrophin despite the presence of mutations that ought to prevent its production.

One is led by Professor K. Davies at the MRC functional genetics unit. This is "Molecular analysis of neuromuscular and neurological disease", which involves the molecular analysis of DMD.

Elective Surgery Abroad

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 813W, on elective surgery abroad, if he will define reasonable access in paragraph three of his answer. [76622]

Mr. Hutton: "Reasonable access" means that the national health service should require through contracts an overseas provider to facilitate visits by recognised NHS bodies such as Commission for Health Improvement, whenever requested to do so.

Foundation Trusts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of his departmental officials are involved in work on foundation status for NHS trusts. [74555]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 October]: Departmental officials currently working on policy development for National Health Service foundation trusts are required to co-ordinate and produce detailed proposals for a new form of NHS organisation in order to meet Government objectives to devolve operational control of the most successful NHS trusts whilst enhancing accountability to local stakeholders. At this stage their usual work primarily includes researching and drafting papers for Ministers on specific policy issues; preparing for the necessary legislation; consulting with key stakeholders; and, handling parliamentary business and ministerial correspondence.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 17 October 2002, Official Report, column 922W, what the usual work is of each of the nine staff of his Department working full-time on foundation trusts. [76848]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Departmental officials currently working on policy development for national health service foundation trusts are required to co-ordinate and produce detailed proposals for a new form of NHS organisation in order to meet Government objectives to devolve operational control of the most successful NHS trusts while enhancing accountability to local stakeholders. At this stage their usual work primarily includes researching and drafting papers for Ministers on specific policy issues; preparing for the necessary legislation; consulting with key stakeholders; and, handling parliamentary business and ministerial correspondence.

GP Walk-in Centres

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of GP walk in centres. [75565]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 21 October 2002]: National health service walk-in centres are a programme to pilot delivery of a new type of accessible and nurse led primary care service.

There are now 42 such centres and the independent national evaluation concluded that they were making a valuable contribution to improving primary care access. Walk-in centres and services therefore have an important and continuing role in securing local delivery of NHS Plan targets for access and emergency care. We are currently considering how best to ensure that primary care trust exploits this potential.

Mid-Essex Hospital Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were waiting for in-patient treatment in the Mid-Essex Hospital Trust on 31 March 1997; and how many months between 31 March 1997 and the latest available date the number has been below that level. [77137]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is shown in the table. The in-patient waiting list for the trust was 8,391 at the end of March 1997 and has not been below that level since then.

National Health Care (Essex)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the National Health Service Trusts management structures and patient organisations in Essex with specific reference to (a) mental health, (b) dental care, (c) hospital trusts, (d) chiropody, (e) ambulance services, and (f) strategic management; how many (i) managers and (ii) administrative staff are in each category; and if he will make a statement on the reporting structure for national health care in Essex. [75885]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested has been placed in the Library. It is not possible to separately identify those medical and dental staff who are managers. Essex Strategic Health Authority is the headquarters for national health service services in the Essex area. The health authority is accountable to the Department and is responsible for supporting local NHS organisations in delivering the NHS Plan, building capacity and supporting performance improvement across all local health agencies.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what procedures are in place to monitor the number of patients and the related cost associated with NICE approved treatments that enable comparisons with the pre-approval phase of the treatment and ensure that NICE guidance is being acted on; [75803]

(2) what procedures are in place to monitor uptake of treatment following its approval by NICE. [75802]

Mr. Lammy: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) has commissioned a research project through the national health service research and development methodology programme to evaluate the impact of its guidance on clinical and managerial practice. Preliminary results are expected in December 2002.

The Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection will be the principal external inspector of the implementation of NICE guidance, and details of this inspection are currently being agreed between the Commission and the Department.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to ensure that all patients have access to testing to ascertain whether they would benefit from a NICE-approved treatment. [75795]

Mr. Lammy: None. The responsibility for arranging tests and deciding what treatment is best for the patient rests with the clinicians concerned. This is done in consultation with the patient, fully taking into account National Institute of Clinical Excellence guidance and informed by the patient's clinical history.

NHS Treatment

Mr. David Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the number of people who die prematurely in the UK each year (a) while waiting for NHS treatment and (b) as a consequence of negligent treatment within the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [76292]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect statistics on the number of people who have died while on the waiting list for treatment. Data are collected on how many patients are removed from the waiting list without being treated but these are not broken down into specific categories.

Data on the number of patients who die prematurely as a result of negligent treatment in the National Health Service are not collected.

Non-specialist Surgeons and Physicians

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations his Department has received concerning (a) the harmful effect on patients of being treated by surgeons and physicians who are not specialists in their field and (b) the chances of such patients making a full recovery; [75773]

(2) what representations his Department has received concerning the number of patients undergoing treatment by surgeons and physicians who are not specialist in their field. [75779]

Mr. Hutton: None. All doctors must work within the limits of their professional competence, as required by General Medical Council (GMC) guidance, Good Medical Practice. Doctors should not, therefore, be given or take on responsibility for patients if they are not competent to do so. This is to ensure that patients receive the highest quality of care and have the best chances of making a full recovery.

Nevertheless all National Health Service patients in hospital are likely to have some contact with a doctor who is not a fully trained specialist. The NHS in England employs about 31,700 doctors, not yet qualified to work independently, in training grades and about 11,800 staff grade doctors, some of whom are trained specialists. 24,400 NHS consultants supervise the work of all of these doctors and are responsible for the care patients receive. Consultants are all trained specialists included on the specialist register held by the GMC.

Ophthalmology Surgery (Worcestershire)

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the saving would be to the county health services in Worcestershire of moving elective ophthalmological day care surgery to the Diagnostic and Treatment Centre at Kidderminster from (a) Worcestershire Royal Infirmary and (b) Alexandra hospital, Redditch. [77244]

Mr. Lammy: The Worcestershire Acute Hospitals National Health Service Trust is currently carrying out a countywide review of ophthalmology services. No decisions have been made on changes to ophthalmology services in Worcestershire, and no detailed cost analysis has been undertaken on the relocation of ophthalmology services to Kidderminster from other acute hospitals. All factors, including any financial implications, will be evaluated fully in determining the nature of future developments.

Organ Donors

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on donor shortage; and what he proposes to do to increase the number of donors available. [77158]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 29 October 2002]: There is a world-wide shortage of organs for transplantation. There are a number of reasons for this not least that there is a welcome reduction in the numbers of people dying in circumstances in which organ donation would have been possible, for example, the decreasing number of fatal road accidents and improvements in neurological surgery.

We are taking specific action to increase the number of donors available by investing in initiatives to raise public awareness and the benefits of organ transplantation, particularly in the ethnic minority populations where there may be a greater need for transplantation, implementing measures to help ensure that potential donors are identified and that we increase the use of both living and non-heartbeating donation. Nearly £4 million is being invested in the national health service through United Kingdom transplant to boost the number of life-saving organ transplants. This is funding 35 donor liaison schemes to improve procedures for identifying possible organ donors and the steps to take so that relatives are approached and given the opportunity to decide about donation. It is also supporting 25 living donation programmes, 10 additional transplant co-ordinators and six non-heartbeating donor programmes.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organ transplants have been made in each year since 1997; how many people have died waiting for organ transplants in that time; and for what organs they were waiting. [77159]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 29 October 2002]: The number of organ transplants in each year since 1997, the number of people dying waiting for a transplant and the organ they were waiting for is shown in the table.

PALS Services

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts have so far established PALS services; what estimate he has made of the extent to which PALS services are functioning; and which trusts do not yet have a PALS service: [77424]

Mr. Lammy: This information is not collected centrally. It is the responsibility of strategic health authorities to monitor Patient Action and Liaison Services (PALS) development. £10 million was made available to health authorities for PALS in 2002–03 and this will be recurring in the primary care trust baselines.

Pharmacy Dispensing Contracts

Mr. Andrew Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pharmacy dispensing contracts were issued in each of the last five years. [77246]

Mr. Lammy: Information on the number of decisions on applications, or of decisions on applications on appeal, relating to the provision of National Health Service pharmaceutical services for the years 1996–97 to 2000–01 is contained in tables 10 and 11 respectively of the Department's statistical bulletin "General Pharmaceutical Services in England and Wales 1991–92 to 2000- 01". Information on the number of community pharmacies providing NHS dispensing services which opened in the same period is available in table 4 of the same bulletin. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Prescription Charges

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 798W, on prescription charges, if he will list the average prescription charge per prescription item dispensed for each year listed; and if he will make a statement. [77031]

Mr. Lammy: The charge per prescription item was set out in the table included with my answer of 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 798W.

Private Treatment

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private patients received treatment in (a) England and (b) each NHS region in each of the last six years as (i) in-patients and (ii) day cases, in NHS pay beds. [76607]

Mr. Hutton: The table gives information on private patients admitted to national health service hospitals in England in each of the last six years for which information is available. A breakdown by NHS region will be placed in the Library.

Finished consultant episodes (FCEs) for private patients treated in NHS hospitals in England

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what baseline his Department will use to demonstrate that organisations have secured a 1 per cent. increase in cost efficiency and 1 per cent. increase in quality equivalent of its budget, as set out in paragraph 8.4 of "Improvement, Expansion and Reform: The Next Three Years". [75714]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 October 2002]: This requirement relates to the value for money public service agreement (PSA) target:

> Value for money in the NHS and personal social services will improve by at least 2 per cent., per annum, with annual improvements of 1 per cent., in both cost efficiency and service effectiveness.

The PSA covers the three years from 2003–04, so the baseline for the target is the cost and quality of services in 2002–03.

Radiographers

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many radiographers are employed by each NHS health authority; and what the comparative figures were for each year since 1997; [75789]

(2) how many radiographers were employed within the NHS for each year since 1997; [75787]

(3) how many radiographers have left the service of the NHS for each year since 1997, broken down by each NHS health authority. [75788]

Mr. Hutton: Information about the number of radiographers working in the national health service since 1997 by health authority area has been placed in the Library.

Information about the number of radiographers leaving the NHS each year is not collected centrally. The non medical work force census records the number of staff working in the NHS each year as at 30 September. It shows the net change in the last year taking account of leavers, retirements, returners and new staff joining the work force.

The number of radiographers employed in the NHS has increased by 940 between September 1997 and September 2001.

Radiotherapy Waiting Times

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received concerning the introduction of a national standard method for calculating radiotherapy waiting times to enable waiting times to be directly compared between radiotherapy centres; and what plans he has to introduce such a national standard. [75749]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has received informal representations from the Royal College of Radiologists and others about the introduction of radiotherapy waiting times monitoring. The NHS Cancer Plan set out maximum waiting time targets for first cancer treatment, which will come into effect over the next few years. Arrangements to monitor these targets are currently being put in place and will cover radiotherapy where this is the first treatment.

Individual radiotherapy services are expected to audit their waiting times for radiotherapy as part of the national standards for cancer. This is monitored locally through the peer review appraisal process. We do not collect data centrally on these waits. Radiotherapy waiting times data will be available when clinical audit datasets are implemented.

Residential Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has undertaken of the implications of the Competition Commission Tribunal Appeal Judgement Bettercare Group Ltd v. The Director General of Fair Trading on resources allocated by government to the purchase of residential care by statutory social services providers from the private sector. [76215]

Jacqui Smith: The competition commission appeal tribunal's (CCAT) judgment in the Bettercare case stated that the Competition Act 1998 applied in the particular circumstances that were presented. One implication of this is that potentially local councils' commissioning of care services could be subject to the Competition Act, but each case would need to be considered in the context of its facts. The judgment did not comment on whether the particular health and social care board involved in the case or other councils are presently contravening the Act. The Office of Fair Trading (OFT) will now reconsider the issue of the alleged anti-competitive conduct of the board involved in the case. Beyond this, no general assessment of the implications of this ruling can be made. I understand that in deciding not to appeal the judgment the OFT had in mind that the European Court is currently considering a similar case (case T-319/99 FENIN v. European Commission). The outcome of this case is expected before the spring of 2003. This may assist in clarifying further whether the Act applies to the commissioning functions of public bodies.

Smallpox Vaccine

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the procedure for letting the contract for supply of smallpox vaccine; and if he will list the companies which he invited to put in tenders. [76273]

Mr. Hutton: After 11 September 2001, the Government decided to augment its existing stocks of smallpox vaccine. For reasons of national security, confidential discussions were held with five companies with known production capabilities in the United Kingdom and Europe and proven track records in the delivery of high quality vaccines. This confidential process was needed to secure stocks quickly in the light of a renewed assessment of risk.

The companies, whose agreement to being identified has been obtained, were Acambis, Aventis Pasteur MSD, GlaxoSmithKline, Powderject and RIVM. Our requirements for the vaccine strain, timing, and delivery were made clear to each of the companies, who were then given time to submit their written responses.

Transplant Surgeons

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the supply of transplantation surgeons in the United Kingdom (a) at present and (b) if targets for increased transplant activities are met. [74238]

Mr. Hutton: Consultants in transplant surgery are not separately identified but are drawn from a range of surgical specialties including cardiac and general surgery (including hepato-biliary) and urology. Postgraduate deans funded 11 new transplant training fellowships from April 2001.

These are aimed at providing additional training in organ transplantation to surgeons nearing the completion of their training. Following the publication of "A Health Service of All the Talents: Developing the NHS Workforce", workforce has been recognised as key to the successful delivery of the NHS Plan. New national workforce planning and development structures have therefore been set up to take up the challenge of delivering a multidisciplinary and integrated health and social care workforce to support service improvement. The supply of transplant surgeons necessary for the delivery of increased transplant activity will be kept under careful review.

Worcestershire Health Authority

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial deficit for the Worcestershire health authority at its dissolution on 1 April, and how this was divided between the primary care trusts that took over its commissioning role. [76243]

Mr. Lammy: Worcestershire health authority had a financial deficit of £2,200,000 at its dissolution on 31 March 2002.

The three primary care trusts (PCTs) in Worcestershire, Redditch and Bromsgrove PCT, South Worcestershire PCT and Wyre Forest PCT, have agreed to divide the £2,200,000 as follows:

Redditch and Bromsgrove PCT	711
South Worcestershire PCT	1,286
Wyre Forest PCT	203
	2,200

HOME DEPARTMENT

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the average penalty imposed following conviction for breach of an antisocial behaviour order has been in cases where the offender was fined; [76684]

(2) how many prosecutions have been brought for breach of an antisocial behaviour order; and how many have resulted in a conviction; [76682]

(3) what the average prison sentence imposed following conviction for breach of an antisocial behaviour order has been, where the offender was sentenced to immediate imprisonment. [76683]

Mr. Denham: The available information, relating to breaches of anti-social behaviour orders in England and Wales, covers the period 1 June 2000 to 31 December 2001 and is shown in the table. The analysis covers only those breaches by persons issued with Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) during this period and notified to the Home Office.

Persons proceeded against for breach of anti-social behaviour orders by outcome England and Wales—1 June 2000 to 31 December 2001

Asylum Seekers

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what relevant statistical evidence of (a) crime rates, (b) illegal working and (c) health service demands was used to inform the decision to withdraw asylum seekers' right to work; [77115]

(2) how he plans to monitor the effects of the change to asylum seekers' rights to work; and if he will undertake to review the situation should there be evidence that there is a detrimental effect on asylum seekers in terms of health, crime and illegal working. [77114]

Beverley Hughes: I made it clear when I announced the abolition of the employment concession earlier this year that this reflected the increasing timeliness of the asylum decision-making process.

The concession was established when widespread delays occurred in the asylum system, and we have always made clear that we would review its operation in light of our ongoing reforms to the asylum system. By the time I announced its abolition in July, it had become largely irrelevant and applicable to only a minority of applicants.

The vast majority (around 80 per cent. of asylum seekers) currently receive an initial decision within six months and we are committed, with our programme of increased resources and ongoing legislative reforms, to further improving the speed of the system for new applicants.

We also believe that while we continued to operate the concession, an incorrect perception existed that all asylum seekers had permission to work while their cases were considered. This was not the case, and this decision underlines our determination to maintain a robust asylum process which helps those fleeing persecution and not those seeking work in the UK. Those who seek to enter the UK for the purpose of work have a range of schemes open to them, and we continue to open up more routes to allow people to come here and work on a legal basis in ways which boost our economy.

Those asylum seekers who had already obtained permission to work prior to 23 July 2002 will retain that right until such time as a final decision is made on their claim, while those who had sought permission to work but have not had a response prior to July 23 will have had their requests considered in line with the concession. We have also retained a discretion to grant permission to work in exceptional cases.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he intends to reply to the letter dated 9 July from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding his constituent Mr. A. Innes of Banff. [77309]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Due to an administrative error, the hon. Member's letter was not forwarded by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to the appropriate area to provide a reply. It has now been passed to UK Visas for their response. I am very sorry for the delay.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will respond to the letters of the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight dated 24 May and 24 July under his reference V1008944/2. [78074]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) wrote to the hon. Member on 23 October. I am sorry for the delay in responding.

Cowboy Builders (West Sussex)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make funding available from the distraction burglary budget or other crime prevention resources to help expand the first check point scheme based in Lancing, West Sussex, dealing with cowboy builders. [78167]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 October 2002]: We have made substantial funding available to local crime and disorder reduction partnerships (CDRPs), under the safer communities initiative, the communities against drugs programme and the partnership development fund, to enable them to tackle their crime problems. The Worthing and Adur CDRPs have been allocated £155,072 and £104,154 respectively for 2002–03 under these initiatives. No further central funding has been set aside for distraction burglary projects in 2002–03.

It is for CDRPs to decide on the priorities and plans for their area and to direct their funding accordingly. In the case of Worthing and Adur, their plans have already been made and approved. If First Check Point wishes to inquire about the possibility of obtaining funding from this source, it will need to contact those local authorities.

It would be open to anyone seeking to set up a similar local scheme elsewhere to approach their CDRP in the same way.

Criminal Justice

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that the parts of the Criminal Justice Bill for which he is responsible are subject to pre-legislative scrutiny on-line. [75306]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The Criminal Justice Bill will be subject to pre-legislative scrutiny by the Home Affairs Committee prior to the second reading of the Bill. The Home Affairs Committee is expected to publish a short report which will be available on-line. On-line consultation will not be possible, given the short time-scales between the Queen's Speech and introduction.

Drug-related Crime

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to target support in the fight against drugs on specific communities. [76675]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The fight against drugs involves co-ordinated action to deal with the supply of drugs and drug-related crime, as well as strengthening communities to resist drugs, and providing treatment, harm minimisation and education services. Resources for all these services are targeted according to local needs, so they can target the drugs which do the most harm, problematic users and the most vulnerable sections of society. We will continue to review the way that the available money is allocated to ensure that it is easily accessible and reaches the areas where it can be most effective.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is planning to strengthen the capability of the Customs and Immigration Services to deal with trafficking in illegal drugs; and if he will make a statement. [77498]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The Concerted Inter-agency Drug Action group comprises representatives of the National Crime Squad, the National Criminal Intelligence Service, the Association of Chief Police Officers, the security and intelligence agencies and a number of other relevant Departments and agencies (but not the Immigration Service), and is chaired by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. It has developed a strategy for tackling supply of heroin and cocaine from source to street as part of the overall drug strategy, an update of which we intend to publish later this year.

Gloucestershire Constabulary

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the ability of Gloucestershire Constabulary to provide acceptable levels of policing during the forthcoming financial year; and if he will make a statement; [77036]

(2) what recent representations he has received on the grant settlement for Gloucestershire Constabulary; and if he will make a statement; [77034]

(3) if he will review the grant settlement awarded to Gloucestershire Constabulary; and if he will make a statement. [77035]

Mr. Denham: Spending Review 2002 has made additional resources available for policing. By 2005–06 spending on the police will amount to around £1.5 billion more than in 2002–03. The final grant position for individual police authorities for the next financial year will take account of the allocation of resources for 2003/04 and the outcome of the recent review of the police funding formula.

We will take decisions on both the Spending Review and the make-up of the police funding formula shortly. During the recent consultation period on the options for changing the funding formula responses have been received from Gloucestershire police authority and an hon. Friend. All responses are being taken into account, and we are considering very carefully the implications for police authorities of implementing each of the options for change.

I intend to provide sufficient resources to support Gloucestershire, along with all other police authorities, in maintaining stable levels of service and continuity in local policing.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been employed by Gloucestershire Constabulary in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [77037]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table.

Gloucestershire Constabulary is currently at record levels of officers.

Homicide (Minors)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have (a) had cases initiated against them and (b) been prosecuted for cases which involve the death of minors in each of the last five years. [75554]

Hilary Benn: A suspect in a homicide case is defined as (i) a person who has been arrested in respect of an offence initially classified as homicide and has been charged with homicide, or (ii) a person who is suspected by the police of having committed the offence, but is known to have died or committed suicide prior to the arrest.

Data on homicides, held centrally, can identify the number of suspects involved and those indicted. The figures for homicide victims under 16 years are given in the table:

	Total number of suspects	Total number of suspects indicted for homicide
1996–97	95	75
1997–98	83	64
1998–99	97	73
1999–2000	75	45
2000–01	88	19

Data as at 3 October 2001; figures are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and by the courts, or as further information becomes available.

In order to avoid duplication of suspects, only the suspects in relation to the first victim have been counted. If there are cases where the first victim is over 16 years and there are other victims under 16, the associated suspects will not have been included.

The number of suspects indicted in the last couple of years has not necessarily fallen These figures will change with time. In the published homicide statistics, data are shown according to the year in which the police initially recorded the offence as homicide. This is not necessarily the year in which the incident which led to the death took place, nor the year in which any court decision was made. The statistics all refer to the position as at 3 October 2001. Subsequent court hearings or other information received will change the figures given, so too much importance should not be placed on the 2000–01 figures.

Homicide statistics are published annually in chapter 4 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". The latest statistics relating to 2000–01 were published in December 2001 in "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 2000".

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have complained to the Parliamentary Ombudsman about delays in the immigration and nationality directorate. [75660]

Beverley Hughes: Information on complaints against Departments investigated during 2001–02 is set out in the Parliamentary Ombudsman's Annual report for 2001–02, copies of which are available in the Library, or on the Parliamentary Ombudsman's website at:

A total of 35 complaints were made to the parliamentary ombudsman about delays in the immigration and nationality directorate between 1 April 2002 and 30 September 2002.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct the Immigration and Nationality Department Board to answer the letters of the hon. Member for Ashford of 11 June 30 July and 11 September on the subject of the Mutabarruku family. [76739]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) wrote to the hon. Member on 25 October. I apologise for the delay in doing so.

National Firearms Certificate Holders Register

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of delays in the national firearms certificate holders register database has been; and if he will make a statement. [76791]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The national firearms certificate holders register is being developed on the police national computer (PNC) by the police information technology organisation (PITO) using its own internal resources. An integral part of the project is to provide a link between the local systems used by forces and the national database on the PNC. The procurement exercise to engage contract support to develop and implement the necessary interfaces failed to provide a satisfactory solution. PITO estimate that the manpower costs associated with this part of the project totalled some £21,000. I understand that PITO have recently issued a non-binding expression of interest for a re-tender to provide a single firearms licensing management system and to build the interface to the PNC. It is unlikely that the register will now be operational before summer 2004 and work is already being developed to achieve that aim.

Notifiable Offences

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) notifiable offences and (b) convictions per notifiable offence there were for each of the last five years in (i) South Somerset and (ii) West Somerset; and what the average figures were in districts within the same departmental family of comparable policing areas. [77017]

Mr. Denham: Information referring to number of (a) notifiable offences (b) the number of convictions for notifiable offences and (c) the proportion of convictions per notifiable offence for the Avon and Somerset police force area is given in the following table. Data giving the proportion of convictions per notifiable offence for selected other police force areas are also given.

Data relating to the areas specified in the question are not centrally available for three of the last five years.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the ratio of police officers to notifiable offences for each of the Police Authorities in England for the latest year for which statistics are available; and if he will make a statement. [77496]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The requested details given in the table are based on information available in the Home Office Statistical Bulletins "Crime in England and Wales 2001–02", published in July, and "Police Service Strength—England and Wales, 31 March 2002", published in September. The ratios may have been affected in comparison to the previous year as a result of some police forces implementing the principles of the National Crime Recording Standard in advance of its national implementation on 1 April 2002.

People Trafficking

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the number of victims of people trafficking who have been removed from this country and then been subsequently trafficked back to the UK or to other EU destinations in the last five years. [77382]

Beverley Hughes: As people trafficking is not yet a criminal offence, there are no figures currently collected on the number of cases of trafficking. The Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill currently before Parliament creates a new offence of trafficking for the purpose of prostitution, which carries a maximum sentence of 14 years. This will enable us to tackle the worst forms of exploitation pending the introduction of more comprehensive legislation when parliamentary time permits.

The only available estimates of the levels of trafficking are based on a Home Office research study "Stopping Traffic" (Police Research Series 125, published in 2000), which indicated that there was intelligence to suggest that some women and children are trafficked into the UK for the purposes of sexual exploitation. This was estimated at between 140 and 1,400 per year, but it was impossible to make a more accurate assessment of numbers. The report concluded that there was no evidence to suggest that this was on a large scale compared with other European countries. The report did not attempt to estimate the number of people who were trafficked a second time, having previously been removed.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate his Department has made of the number of women illegally trafficked to Britain against their will for use in vice rings in the last 12 months. [77554]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: As people trafficking is not yet a criminal offence, there are no figures currently collected on the number of cases of trafficking. The only available estimates of the levels of trafficking are based on a Home Office research study "Stopping Traffic" (Police Research Series 125, published in 2000), which indicated that there was intelligence to suggest that some women and children are trafficked into the UK for the purposes of sexual exploitation. This was estimated at between 140 and 1,400 per year but it was impossible to make a more accurate assessment of numbers.

Police Funding (Avon and Somerset)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are planned in Government funding for Avon and Somerset police between 2002–03 and 2003–04. [76944]

Mr. Denham: Spending Review 2002 has made additional resources available for policing. By 2005–06, spending on the police will amount to around £1.5 billion more than in 2002–03. The final grant position for individual police authorities will take account of the allocation of resources for 2003–04 and the outcome of the recent consultation process on Local Government Finance Formula Grant Distribution.

We will take decisions on both the Spending Review and the police funding formula shortly.

Police National Computer

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of convictions were entered on the Police National Computer within three days of the conviction in the last six months; [77119]

(2) what the average time taken to input conviction data on the Police National Computer, broken down by force, was in the last six months; [77122]

(3) what proportion of police forces met the target of three days between conviction and entry of that conviction on the Police National Computer over the last six months. [77121]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Information is not collected in the form requested. Courts are required to notify court results (in conviction and other cases) to police forces within three working days of completion of the case. Under performance standards set by the Association of Chief Police Officers, police forces are required to input court results (in conviction and other cases) onto the Police National Computer within 72 hours of the receipt of information from the court about the case disposal. We are determined that such key information should be recorded on the Police National Computer in a timely fashion- We therefore commissioned Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary to manage and monitor a 12-month programme of work for every force to improve the timeliness of the inputting of key data. As regards court results, the primary purpose was to clear backlog of outstanding cases. The Inspectorate's first report showed considerable progress. Its second report, on the programme overall, which indicates substantial further progress, is under consideration.

Retail Crime

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Government have introduced since 1997 to enable retailers to ban customers from their premises. [78176]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 29 October 2002]: Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs), which have been available since April 1999, can be used to exclude people from specific areas such as retail premises or shopping centres. ASBOs are currently granted by magistrates on application from the police or local authority.

The Government have also provided support to the British Retail Consortium to assist them in setting up retail crime partnerships. Members of these partnerships use exclusion notices to prevent people from entering their premises.

Rural policing funds

Mr Ian Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government has to absorb rural policing funds into the main formula by increasing the sparsity factor. [76947]

Mr. Denham: The option to incorporate the £30 million rural policing fund into the main formula and to increase the sparsity component to one per cent. was one of a number of options for change that were included in the local government finance formula grant distribution paper in July.

We are taking into account all responses received during the consultation period and are considering carefully the impact of implementing each of the changes. We shall announce our conclusions shortly.

Speeding Offences

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the powers of a police authority to apply money raised from speeding fines for anti-speeding strategies. [77838]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: [holding answer 29 October 2002]: All revenue from speeding offences is normally paid to Her Majesty's Treasury. Under a scheme currently being rolled out nationally, however, fixed penalty fine revenue from enforcement by the use of speed and red-light traffic cameras can be re-invested to meet the costs of such enforcement. Deployment of cameras so funded is subject to strict conditions, including that sites must have a history of speed related casualties and that the cameras must be clearly visible and conspicuous, in order to deter speeding. Money left over goes, as before, to Her Majesty's Treasury.

UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs

Mr.Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whom he plans to send to represent the Government at the 46th session of the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs to be held in April 2003; and what issues the Government expect to raise at the session. [77355]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The Government are normally represented by a Home Office official at commission sessions. The 46th session will include a ministerial segment, but the Government will not make a decision about representation at this level until the new year, when the agenda for it will be finalised.

Youth Inclusion Programmes

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to fund Youth Inclusion programmes beyond their initial three-year period. [76977]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 October 2002: We announced on 21 October that the existing Youth Inclusion programme will receive funding for a further three years from April 2003. These schemes, which operate in the most deprived neighbourhoods in England and Wales, have been successful in engaging those young people most at risk of crime, leading to reductions in arrests and rates of crime in the local areas. The Youth Inclusion programme is one of a range of measures that we have introduced to address youth crime. The programmes include work with families, schools and in neighbourhoods, and our programme to reduce street crime.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Damages (Minors)

Ian Lucas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, if he will require that, when an award of damages to a minor is invested, the principal sum is guaranteed in the event of a fall in the value of the investment. [77649]

Yvette Cooper: The Court Funds Office (CFO) is the Office of the Accountant General of the Supreme Court. One of the functions of the CFO is to administer funds paid into court on behalf of children when an award of damages is made by the court. The CFO will hold money until the child's 18th birthday unless a Court Order instructs otherwise.

Money is invested in one of two ways:

- the CFO seeks the advice of its investment service based at the Office of the Official Solicitor and Public Trustee (OSPT), on the investment of money in stocks and certain unit and investment trusts; or
- the money is placed to the CFO special account that pays a competitive gross rate (before tax) of interest with instant access.

The investment approach to be applied depends upon the investment policy set by the court, the requirements of the fund, the age of the child and the amount of money held. Smaller sums held for shorter periods are placed on deposit and the principal sum will be secure. Larger sums held for longer periods are invested for the long-term usually, with equity exposure. In these cases, no absolute guarantee of capital value can be given.

Judicial Appointments Annual Report

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, when the fourth Judicial Appointments Annual Report is to be published and what information this edition will contain. [78777]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Judicial Appointments Annual Report, covering the period 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002, is published today. The report includes comprehensive narrative descriptions and statistics on appointments to the judiciary, Queen's Counsel, lay magistrates and general commissioners of income tax. It describes the continuing development of the Lord Chancellor's appointments policies, procedures and initiatives, including the establishment of the Commission for Judicial Appointments, and progress in implementing other recommendations from Sir Leonard Peach's 1999 scrutiny.

Copies of the report have been placed in both Libraries. The report is also available on the internet.

Magistrates Courts (Greater Manchester)

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was awarded in fines in each of the last 12 months and what percentage of such fines have been (a) collected and (b) written off by each magistrates court in Greater Manchester; and what assessment the Lord Chancellor has made of the impact of court enforcement officers in fine enforcements. [77809]

Yvette Cooper: Magistrates courts committees (MCCs) have a responsibility for the collection of a range of debts imposed by the magistrates courts and the Crown court. Debt collected includes not only fines but also fees, compensation, confiscation orders, legal aid contributions and some maintenance orders. It is not possible to separate out only fines from the total.

Greater Manchester magistrates courts committee was unable to provide a monthly breakdown of figures. Data are collected from each of the 11 court houses in their estate on a quarterly basis. The figures for the last four quarters are set out in the following table. The percentages in the debt paid and debt written off columns include amounts that have been imposed in previous quarters. It is not possible therefore to isolate the amounts imposed that have been paid and written off in any particular quarter.

The Government remain committed to improving the enforcement of financial penalties and addressing variations in performance. Current variations in performance across the country are far too wide. Work is under way with the MCCs to look at the reasons behind the wide variations to improve their performance.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Websites

Dr. Cable: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the website links associated with his Department, including sites now dormant or closed, and indicating whether they are live, dormant or closed; what the start up costs were for each site listed; what the operating costs were in each year since start up for each site; which company hosted each site; what assessment takes place for each site; which company does the assessment; if he will place the assessment reports in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [75585]

The Prime Minister: The current 10 Downing Street website "pm.gov.uk" was launched in February 2000 at an initial cost of £75,000, hosted in-house. The running costs in each subsequent financial year are as follows: £185,000 (2000–01), £187,000 (2001–02).

The number of page impressions and visitor sessions that the site received is monitored weekly in-house and usage statistics are published on the site (www.pm.gov.uk). The 10 Downing Street website received 3,268,240 visitor sessions and 46,379,169 page impressions last year.

Two other sites—"annualreport.gov.uk" and "inyourarea.gov.uk"—were launched in July 2000 at an initial cost of £55,000, hosted by Peasy Ltd. The running costs in each subsequent financial year were as follows:

£11,750 (2000–01) and £28,500 (2001–02). Both sites are currently being incorporated into the main Downing Street website.

Special Envoys

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those persons who, since 1 May 1997, have acted as a non-official special envoy on his behalf in countries outside the UK. [77684]

The Prime Minister: As has been the practice for previous Administrations, if it is helpful to the UK Government individuals may be asked to carry messages or undertake particular tasks on behalf of the Prime Minister or the Foreign Secretary. We do not maintain a record of such occasions.

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the visits undertaken since 11 March by Lord Levy in his capacity as special envoy, giving in each case the dates of the visit, the persons met, and the purpose of the visit. [77800]

The Prime Minister: In his capacity as the Prime Minister's envoy, Lord Levy has travelled overseas to exchange views on the Middle East peace process with a range of contacts since 11 March.

Lord Levy visited Israel between 22 and 24 March and 15 and 17 July. He met Israeli contacts including Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, Defence Minister Benjamin Ben-Eliezer, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, President Moshe Katsav, Chairman of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee Haim Ramon, and Knesset Speaker Avraham Burg. Lord Levy also met US Envoy General Anthony Zinni and US State Department Senior Advisor for Israeli-Arab Negotiations Aaron Miller while he was in Israel in March.

Meetings also took place on both of these visits with Palestinian Authority leadership including President Yasser Arafat, Sa'eb Erekat, Mohammed Rashid, Mohammed Dahlan and Jibril Rajoub.

Between 7 and 9 July Lord Levy visited Morocco and met King Mohammed VI. He also met King Mohammed's advisor Andre Azoulay, Foreign Minister Mohammed Benaissa, and Deputy Foreign Minister Taib Fassi-Fehri.

On 17 and 18 July Lord Levy visited Egypt. He met President Mubarek, Arab League Secretary General Amre Moussa and Presidential Advisor Dr. Osama al-Baz.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Ian Lucas: To ask the Solicitor General on how many occasions the CPS has (a) prosecuted and (b) declined to prosecute an offender for breach of an antisocial behaviour order in 2002. [76681]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 28 October 2002]: A breach of an antisocial behaviour order is a criminal offence. The CPS is responsible for the review and conduct of such cases. In considering the decision to prosecute, Crown Prosecutors apply the evidential and public interest tests as set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors.

The CPS holds no central records in respect of particular offences. The information is held on individual case files, and could only be obtained by examining each relevant file in every CPS office: the costs of this exercise would be prohibitive.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Air Industry Levy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much levy was received by the Government in financial years (a) 1998–99; (b) 1999–00 and (c) 2000–01 in respect of (i) the Airbus A320 Launch Aid, (ii) the Airbus A330/340 Launch Aid, (iii) RB211–535 aeroengine, (iv) V2500 aeroengine, (v) EH101 helicopter and (vi) Lear 45 executive jet; and if she will make a statement. [77901]

Alan Johnson: Unfortunately the Government cannot disclose the levies received by programme as the information is commercially confidential and market sensitive under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Public Information. However, I can provide the total levies received for those programmes for the financial years requested. These are as follows:

Financial Year	Total levies received for A320, A330, RB211–535, V2500, EH101
1998–99	£152.4 million
1999–00	£187.2 million
2000–01	£130.9 million

Airbus 340

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Government has invested, broken down by financial year, in British Aerospace plc for development of the new airbus A340–500/600 wing; and if she will make a statement. [77904]

Alan Johnson: The Government did not invest in the Airbus A340–500/600 wing programme.

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects solicitors dealing with mining and compensation claims to have received the chronic bronchitis and emphysema pensions model on computer disc. [77974]

Mr. Wilson: The Department issued a spreadsheet based pensions calculator to claimants' representatives on computer disc in June 2002, as an interim measure to assist solicitors. The spreadsheet is also available on the website.

An enhanced pensions model is being developed and is currently undergoing comprehensive testing. Such testing is necessary to ensure that the model is calculating damages correctly before it is issued to claimants' representatives.

The Department is liaising with the Coordinating Solicitors Group on both the testing and the plans for issuing it once testing is complete. It is currently planned to release the model in stages-and we expect that the first phase will be released by the end of the year, subject to resolution of certain outstanding issues.

The pensions model is a complex piece of software and a number of parties are involved in the test and issue process. It is not possible to exactly predict when the complete model will be available, as further problems may be identified during the remaining period of testing that could require fixing before final release.

Cleaner Vehicles Task Force

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial assistance has been given to the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force in each of the last five years; what future support is planned in the next two years; when the Task Force is next due to report; what assessment has taken place of the effectiveness of the Task Force; and if she will make a statement. [78265]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

My Department and the Department of Trade and Industry provided secretariat support to the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force (CVTF) and we jointly funded the publication of the Task Force's various reports. The final report of the CVTF "The Way Forward", was published in June 2000 containing a range of recommendations for Government, industry and others on encouraging the production and introduction of cleaner vehicles and fuels. The Government published a formal response to these recommendations in December 2000 (Cm4932) as well as providing a further update on progress in March 2002. Copies of these documents are available in the Libraries of the House.

Hydrogen Technologies

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether her Department has sponsored research into the possible contribution of nuclear energy to the creation of hydrogen to power fuel cells. [77235]

Mr. Wilson: The Department is not currently sponsoring specific research into the possible contribution of nuclear energy to the creation of hydrogen to power fuel cells. We are, however, actively investing in sustainable hydrogen technologies through industrial research and development on fuel cells via the DTI Advanced Fuel Cells Programme. This is worth approximately £2 million per year. The Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC) is investing in fundamental research into sustainable hydrogen technologies at approximately £3 million over four years (through the SUPERGEN initiative) and also in fuel cell technology through generic mechanisms (approximately £500,000 per year).

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what evaluation she has made of options available to introduce hydrogen-based fuel for transport. [77236]

Mr. Wilson: Hydrogen can be generated via a number of routes and may be used in modified internal combustion engines or fuel cells to power vehicles. The forthcoming Energy White Paper will discuss the prospective use of hydrogen and fuel cell technology in transport, industrial and other stationary applications.

Security Operation (Barrow)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many personnel, at what cost, and how many Royal Navy vessels were involved in the security operation at Barrow-in-Furness for the docking of the Pacific Pintail and Pacific Teal vessels in September. [77769]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 October 2002]: Security for the transportation of nuclear material is regulated by the Office for Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS), the security regulator. It is not Government policy to disclose details of security measures taken in connection with nuclear material. The costs of compliance with regulatory nuclear security requirements are borne by the company. Details of those costs are a matter for BNFL.

No Royal Navy vessels were involved with the security operation at Barrow-in-Furness.

Trent Aero Engines

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Government has invested broken down by financial year, in Rolls-Royce plc for development of the next generation Trent aero engines; and if she will make a statement. [77905]

Alan Johnson: The Government will invest £250 million between the years 2000–2003, for the development of the Rolls-Royce Trent 600/900 aeroengines. Launch Investment has helped to maintain the UK's competence in aerospace research and development by supporting Rolls-Royce as a manufacturing centre of excellence in the UK. Rolls-Royce currently employs within the UK 26,500 employees in the civil aerospace sector.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to introduce legislation to allow the development of offshore wind farms outside the 12-mile territorial limit; and if she will make a statement. [78142]

Mr. Wilson: It is important that a legislative framework is in place so that developers are able to build wind farms beyond the 12-mile territorial sea limit. The Government intends to legislate as soon as a place for a Bill is available in the legislative programme.

TRANSPORT

Air Transport (Consultation Document)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many copies of the Department's consultation paper on Future Development of Air Transport in the UK: South East have been issued with the figure of £15,000 instead of £1,500 in paragraph

19.19; and what measures have been taken to inform those in possession of the erroneous publication of this mistake. [76810]

Mr. Jamieson: In paragraph 19.9 of "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom (South East)" main, and the second paragraph of section 12.2 of the "South East summary consultation" document the correct wording should be ". . .subject to a maximum payment of £15,000."

The error has been corrected in reprints of both documents and an erratum has been posted for the web version. Letters correcting the error are being sent to all residents who received a summary document in the initial mailing. The hon. Member will also want to be aware that as part of the compulsory purchase policy review, my right hon Friend the Deputy Prime Minister is currently consulting on options that might lead to the revision of the existing Home-loss payments provisions.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his plans in respect of the Beddingham level crossing on the A27; and whether his plans will include options for consultation with the public. [77689]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Norman Baker, dated 30 October 2002:

"I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in respect of the Beddingham Level Crossing on the A27 and plans for public consultation.

Because of the urgent need to improve safety for both road and rail users at the level crossing, the Highways Agency is consulting on proposals to provide a bridge over the crossing. This was announced in the recent Press Notice (HA483/02) giving details of the Government's rolling programme for dealing with congestion and safety at junctions on the trunk road. The proposals being developed take into account the recommendations from the South Coast Multi Modal Study (SOCOMMS).

The safety issues with the level crossing are long standing and are likely to increase in future due to possible increases in train services along the south coast line. Traffic management measures have been installed with some beneficial effect but the Agency, Railtrack and the Health and Safety Executive (HOUSE) do not see these as the solution. The HSE (Railway Inspectorate) consider that whilst the number of incidents has reduced the crossing is a high risk site and the highest in the south east. Without grade separation soon the Executive will instruct Railtrack to install full barriers at the crossing instead of the existing half barriers. Should this happen the lost time to road traffic will rise to approximately 20–24 minutes in any hour. This would have a dramatic effect on road capacity and result in a significant increase in the delays that already occur and the amount of queuing currently experienced during peak periods along the A27 in both directions. This in turn would lead to greater pressure on parallel routes as traffic sought to avoid the delays.

We are arranging a public exhibition for the first week in December, with a Preview exhibition for Councillors, and other elected representatives on the 5th December. A newsletter will be issued to local residents shortly, explaining our proposals and inviting them to an exhibition. We will write to you again nearer December with a formal invitation to the Preview and exhibition.

If you would like any further details Phil Barnett (Project Manager on 01306–878481) or Paul Arnold (Team Leader on 01306 878475) in our Dorking office would be pleased to help you."

A59 (Lancashire)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will examine the safety of the junction of the A59 in Lancashire at the Clitheroe and Sabden turnoffs and fund changes to it. [77654]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr Tim Matthews, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mr Nigel Evans, dated 30 October 2002:

"I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent parliamentary question about safety on the A59 trunk road at the Pendle Road/Sabden Road staggered junction in Lancashire.

The Highways Agency has been monitoring accidents at the junction following the improvements that were undertaken in 1999. The analysis of this accident data indicates a common factor in all of the accidents, namely, collisions between vehicles emerging from the side roads and traffic travelling through the junction on the A59. A number of options have been identified to address this type of accident, and a detailed traffic count and analysis of turning movements is currently under way.

We are in discussion with the Lancashire Police and plan to meet with them again early next month to agree a strategy for implementing any changes. Our provisional view is that the most appropriate solution would be to make modifications to the existing junction. Our preferred options involve introducing right turn bans, to limit the risk of conflicts occurring, and measures to narrow the A59 carriageway through the junction to restrict opportunities for overtaking and to reduce speed.

As you may be aware, the A59 is one of a number of routes identified for transfer to local highway authorities in the 1998 White Paper, "A New Deal for Trunk Roads". Under this process, known as detrunking, we are working to a programme for transferring responsibility for the A59 to Lancashire County Council in the spring of next year. This process allows for a fair and equitable transfer of funds to local highway authorities that the Agency would have spent on these roads, including finance for possible schemes such as this.

Depending on the extent of the changes that are adopted to this junction, it may be possible for the Agency to undertake the work within funding allocated for this financial year. Should this not be the case, then it will be for Lancashire County Council as the new highway authority to decide on the improvements they wish to take forward from the funds that they are allocated.

I hope this is helpful. If you would like any further information about this matter, please contact the Agency's Route Manager for the A59, Trevor Hunt, Sunley Tower, Piccadilly Plaza, Manchester M1 4BE (Tel 0161 930 5691)."

Airport Security

Paul Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what plans his Department has to review airport security measures. [78601]

Mr. Darling: Aviation security measures remain at an enhanced level following the attacks on 11 September last year. The Government keep these measures under constant review, and from time to time additional protective steps will be taken as the situation demands.

In May this year, as part of the process of continuing review, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I appointed Sir John Wheeler to conduct an independent examination of airport security. The terms of reference for this work, set out in full in the report Sir John submitted to us on 13 September, included a focus on the threat from serious and organised crime at UK airports and the role of the Police Service.

The Government are grateful to Sir John for the care with which he analysed the issues, and we have considered carefully his findings and recommendations. These, together with his introduction to the report, are today being placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The main body of the document contains information about operational security matters, and for that reason it would not be appropriate to publish the report in its entirety.

The Report endorses the National Aviation Security Programme and the commitment of those working to deliver its objectives. It also makes some valuable recommendations around the need to strengthen strategic direction, to undertake a detailed multi-agency assessment of the potential threats from serious and organised crime, and to overhaul the arrangements by which airports may be 'designated' for policing by uniformed officers. The Government are happy to accept in principle all of Sir John's recommendations. My Department and the Home Office are working closely together on implementation, which will bring in the police and other control agencies and the airport industry.

Cliffe Airport

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 October (ref 74930), what provisional estimates his officials have made of the proportion of take-offs from the possible Cliffe Airport that would take-off towards the east, with reference to wind direction patterns. [77831]

Mr. Jamieson: For appraisal purposes, The South East and East of England Regional Air Services study (SERAS) assumed, for all options, that around 30% of departures would be to the east.

Double Decker Buses

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the EU Bus Directive; and if he will make a statement on the future use of double decker buses in the UK.[Transferred] [77880]

Mr. Jamieson: The Directive was adopted on 20th November 2001. Officials at my Department are in the process of completing an initial consultation requesting views on the proposed method of implementing it into UK legislation. We are proposing to integrate the requirements of the directive into a consolidation of existing bus and coach regulations to make them simpler and easier to understand. It is hoped to implement this consolidation in the latter half of 2003.

The Directive will have no effect on the use of existing double-decker buses operating in the UK. Our regulations will permit the current design of low floor, accessible double deck buses to continue to be produced.

Manchester Metrolink

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what extra funding his Department will commit to phase 3 of the Manchester Metrolink extensions following the recent tenders. [78417]

Mr. Jamieson: This matter is still under consideration.

Overseas Drivers

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedures exist to check the driving documents of overseas drivers entering the UK to see if they are involved in outstanding road traffic offences from previous visits; and if he will make a statement. [78525]

Mr. Jamieson: Enforcement of road traffic law is an operational matter for the police. I understand from the Association of Chief Police Officers that the police do not make any specific provision for checking the driving documents of overseas drivers entering the UK. Police require drivers to produce their driving documents routinely after most police stops and following road accidents and traffic offences. The nationality of a driver does not make any difference to this process: all drivers are subject to the provisions of the Road Traffic Acts.

Details of endorsable road traffic offences committed in Great Britain by all drivers are maintained by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, and may be accessed by the police (via the Police National Computer) in cases where such drivers are stopped at the roadside.

Additionally, my officials are currently pursuing the ratification of the European Union Driving Disqualification Convention which was adopted and signed under the United Kingdom presidency by all member states. This convention will ensure that a driving disqualification imposed on a European Union citizen in any member state is recognised across all other member states.

Pensioner Bus Passes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend the concessionary fare arrangements to offer free bus passes to all pensioners. [77844]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 29 October 2002]: The Transport Act 2000 guaranteed that from 1 June 2001 all pensioners have been entitled to a free bus pass allowing half-fare travel on local buses, as a minimum. From 1 April 2003 the concession will also be extended to men aged between 60 and 65. We have no plans to extend these provisions, but the legislation does not prevent local authorities from providing concessionary fare schemes which are more extensive than the statutory minimum.

Railways

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his Answer of 15 October, Official Report, column 711W, on railways, how many miles of new rail track, excluding repairs to existing track, have been constructed since May 1997. [77786]

Mr. Jamieson: None.

Railways (Bonds Financing)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent discussions have taken place between his Department, the Strategic Rail Authority and the Treasury into the role of bonds as a financing mechanism within the railways; and if he will place copies of related correspondence in the Library; [76474]

(2) what research has been conducted by and for (a) his Department and (b) the Strategic Rail Authority into the role of bonds as a financing mechanism within the railways; and if he will place copies in the Library. [76195]

(3) what representations have been received by (a) his Department and (b) the Strategic Rail Authority on the role of bonds as a financing mechanism within the railways; and if he will place copies in the Library. [76206]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department has not commissioned any research on the issue of bond financing of railways. It has received a number of representations on rail finances, some of which touch on matters relating to bond financing. The Department would generally expect to seek advice as necessary on such issues from the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA).

The SRA is itself now considering a number of options for the future financing of the rail industry. However, no firm proposals involving such options have been put to the Department or the Treasury.

For completeness, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear to the House on 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 976, Network Rail plans to replace its short term bridge finance through longer-term loans securitised against its future income.

Rural Bus Challenge

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for money allocated to but not spent through the Rural Bus Challenge in 2001–02. [77954]

Mr. Jamieson: All the £20.5 million awarded to projects successful in the Rural Bus Challenge competition held in 2001–02 remains allocated to those projects. Challenge projects are typically designed to last for 2 or 3 years and expenditure is spread over the relevant financial years.

Seat Belts (Buses)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which is the competent authority to determine the requirements for (a) the fitting of and (b) the use of seat belts in buses and coaches in the UK. [77879]

Mr. Jamieson: Regulations on the fitting and use of seat belts in coaches and buses are prepared by the Department for Transport and approved by Parliament in accordance with Directives agreed within the European Union.

Severn Tunnel

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Severn Tunnel will remain open in the event of a fire brigade strike. [77792]

Mr. Jamieson: During any industrial action by the Fire Brigade Unions, it is expected that passenger and freight services will operate nearly normally through the Severn Tunnel. The exception will be the transport of some hazardous materials which will be re-routed around the Tunnel.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the (a) condition of and (b) need for infrastructure schemes on the West Coast Main Line north of Preston. [77609]

Mr. Jamieson: The SRA's West Coast Strategy document describes, principally in Appendix A, the main infrastructure measures which are expected to be involved, both for the route as a whole and for specific sections.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment his Department has made of the feasibility of asking train and freight operating companies to purchase cheaper rolling stock than that envisaged in the Strategic Rail Authority's consultation document West Coast Strategy; [77612]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the additional costs that train and freight operating companies will need to bear to meet rolling stock requirements envisaged in the Strategic Rail Authority's consultation document on the West Coast Strategy; and from what sources these costs would be met; [77608]

(3) what estimate his Department has made of the likely final level of compensation that will be paid to (a) each passenger train operating company, (b) each freight train operating company and (c) the Royal Mail as a result of (i) the proposed decision to establish a fast line speed maximum of 125 miles per hour rather than 140 miles per hour and (ii) the proposed rolling stock requirements outlined in the Strategic Rail Authority's consultation document West Coast Strategy; and from what sources such compensation would be paid. [77611]

Mr. Jamieson: The SRA's West Coast Strategy sets out a package of proposed measures, including infrastructure works and rolling stock changes, which together would deliver the benefits from the upgrade and provide good value for money. The detailed specifications for replacement rolling stock have yet to be fully worked up. The SRA are continuing to discuss these issues with the passenger and freight operating companies and with Network Rail. The cost implications will depend on the final service specification which is agreed, and the terms of the new or revised access agreements which will need to be entered into between the SRA and the train operators. These agreements will also be subject to the Rail Regulator's approval.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the cost of concentrating possessions in periods close to public holidays outlined in the Strategic Rail Authority's consultation document on the West Coast Strategy to the tourist industry in (a) the North West and (b) Blackpool. [77613]

Mr. Jamieson: The proposed engineering programme set out in the SRA's West Coast Strategy has been designed to minimise the impact on all passengers and in particular to reduce the need for weekend and Bank Holiday possessions. For much of the time that works are taking place, trains will continue to operate between London and the north west without interruption. The alternative to total closure of certain sections of the route for limited periods would be considerably more weekend possessions, with an adverse effect on the leisure and tourist industry. However, if the industry has specific concerns about these proposals they should respond accordingly to the SRA's consultation.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the signalling arrangements envisaged in the Strategic Rail Authority's Consultation document West Coast Strategy will have to be replaced with ERTMS technology to meet EU requirements. [77614]

Mr. Jamieson: The requirements set by the EU for the implementation of ERTMS do not include a specific deadline.

TREASURY

Census 2001

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the 2001 census; and if he will make a statement. [77401]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 30 October 2002:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer asking what assessment has been made of the accuracy of the 2001 Census. (77401)

Census 2001 results are the first to represent the entire population. This was achieved through a new strategy known as the 'One Number Census'. One of the key elements was an independent follow-up survey. The Census Coverage Survey (CCS), as it is known, involved an intensive face-to-face survey of a sample of over 16,000 postcodes containing 320,000 households covering every local authority in England and Wales. By combining the results of the Census and the CCS, it was possible in 2001 to estimate the total resident population-the 'one number'- to a high level of precision, plus or minus 0.2 per cent., and to provide information on the characteristics of those persons missed by the Census.

Thus in 2001, the Census results represent 100 per cent. of the population. Census response, that is the proportion of people returning a form in England and Wales, was 94 per cent. The 6% of people estimated to have been missed by the Census have been added to the counts using a statistical process that was subject to extensive consultation, and based on the results of the CCS.

I am confident that the approach we have taken to the 2001 Census provides the most accurate estimates of the population both nationally and for each of the 376 local authorities in England and Wales. No census ever gets responses from 100 per cent. of the population. The 2001 Census was designed from the outset to take full account of this to provide what users of statistics really want—figures representing everyone.

In addition, the 2001 Census has undergone rigorous testing and quality checking throughout both the fieldwork and processing. Census tests were carried out in 1997 and 1999 and a survey designed to measure the accuracy of response to each question has been completed. Furthermore, a comprehensive set of verification and validation checks were built in to the processing of the data, and data quality played a key role in all aspects of processing the forms. All information on accuracy will be contained in a Census Quality report to be published in 2003.

Information published so far about the accuracy of the Census is available on the National Statistics website at www.statistics.gov.uk.

Church Restoration and Repairs

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with his EU counterparts regarding (a) fiscal and (b) other support for church restoration and repairs. [77833]

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations are being made by the UK Government to the European Parliament on the issue of VAT on church repairs; [78317]

(2) what representations he has received in connection with the possible extension of the listed places of worship grant scheme beyond March 2003. [78316]

John Healey: The Government's long-term objective is to secure a reduced rate of VAT for the repair and maintenance of listed buildings which are used as places of worship. At present the formal European agreements in place on VAT prevent us from doing so. As the Chancellor said in Budget 2001, the European Commission has indicated that it will review its reduced rates for VAT in 2003. The Government have introduced a grant scheme to run in the interim period, until the review has been completed.

Firefighters' Strike

Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what preparations he has made to ensure the safety and continuity of service to the public in the event of a firefighters' strike. [77669]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by the Minister for Local Government and the Regions on 28 October 2002, Official Report, column 527W.

Money Laundering

Harry Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the Government's policy is on action relating to countries named on the OECD's latest money laundering blacklist; and if he will make a statement; [78455]

(2) what action he has recently taken to encourage (a) Grenada, (b) Nauru, (c) St.Vincent and the Grenadines and (d) the Cook Islands to comply with the OECD anti-money-laundering system; and if he will make a statement. [78454]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are working actively with other members of the Financial Action Task Force to help jurisdictions on the FATF list of non-cooperative countries and territories to strengthen their anti-money laundering systems. An FATF delegation will visit Grenada in December to review progress, and an IMF mission in 2003 will provide technical assistance to the Cook Islands.

Most countries are taking measures to improve their systems, and the Government welcome the decision of the FATF last month to remove Russia, Dominica, Niue and the Marshall Islands from the NCCT list in view of the progress they had made. However, in December 2001, the FATF decided to implement counter-measures against Nauru in view of its lack of progress. These counter-measures involve enhanced surveillance and reporting of financial transactions with Nauru.

Taxation

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the taxation and national insurance to be raised as a result of the measures covered by IR35 in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04; and when that estimate was made; [78106]

(2) what taxation and national insurance revenues have been raised as a result of the measures covered by IR35 in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02; [78105]

(3) how many individuals pay tax and national insurance following PAYE/NIC rules as a result of the measures covered by IR35 [78107]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the yield from the introduction of service company legislation to counter avoidance in the provision of personal services were published in Appendix A2 of the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report.It was estimated that 90,000 companies were potentially affected at the time of the introduction of the new rules to tackle avoidance, and that around half would continue to operate subject to additional income tax and National Insurance contributions on deemed payments when required. The Inland Revenue continues to monitor the situation and to ensure that everyone pays the right tax and NICs.

WALES

Manufacturing

7. Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales regarding manufacturing in Wales. [760

Peter Hain: Working with the First Minister, the Government are developing policies for a strong manufacturing sector in Wales, despite the slowdown in the world economy and the weakness of the euro.

Barnett Formula

10. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last discussed the impact of the Barnett formula with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. [76067]

Peter Hain: I have not yet had a chance to discuss the impact of the Barnett formula with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but it has served Wales well.

Illegal Drugs

11. Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will take to help combat misuse of illegal drugs in Wrexham. [76068]

Mr. Touhig: I am concerned by the use of illegal drugs throughout Wales and have regular meetings with the police, National Assembly for Wales and the Home Office to discuss the situation and solutions to this blight on our communities.

Economic Development

12. Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has held with Ministers in the National Assembly for Wales about economic development issues in south-west Wales. [76069]

Peter Hain: My predecessor had regular discussions with Assembly Ministers about economic development across the whole of Wales, and I intend to continue with these meetings.

Cockle Beds

13. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary on cockling on the Dee. [76070]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend, the former Secretary of State for Wales, raised this issue with the First Minister last year. He also visited the hon. Member's constituency to discuss this and other issues.

I have also raised this issue with the Assembly Rural Development Minister and Transport, Planning and Environment Minister.

Hospital Building

14. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Health Minister in Wales to discuss her hospital building programme. [76071]

Mr. Touhig: My right Hon. Friend the Secretary of State will continue to meet regularly with the National Assembly of Wales Health and Social Services Minister to discuss a range of issues, including the NHS in Wales.

Gravel Extraction

15. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary to discuss alternatives to sand and gravel extraction from the Bristol channel. [76072]

Peter Hain: Like my predecessor, I intend to have regular discussions with the First Minister about issues affecting Wales.

I understand that it is primarily sand, which is extracted from the Bristol channel. This is currently the primary source of fine aggregates for the south-east Wales market.

I know that the Assembly is looking at a range of options for satisfying this demand. Their objective is to find a long-term solution which is economically viable, as well as being environmentally acceptable.

SMEs

16. Dr. Francis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about prospects for small and medium-sized enterprises in Wales. [76073]

Peter Hain: My predecessor met regularly with Cabinet colleagues, including the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to discuss a wide range of issues, including small businesses and I will of course continue to do so.

Small and medium-sized enterprises account for over 99 per cent. of all businesses in Wales and are therefore crucial to the economic success of Wales. A number of measures in the Chancellor's budget will make a significant contribution to supporting small businesses in Wales. 6,000 Welsh SMEs will benefit from the corporation tax starting rate cut from 10 per cent. to zero and a further 13,000 will be helped by the 1 per cent. reduction in the small companies' rate. In addition, thousands of Welsh SMEs will benefit from measures to simplify their VAT.

Employment

17. Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what recent discussions he has had with the First Minister of the National Assembly concerning unemployment in Wales. [76075]

Peter Hain: I fully intend to continue to hold regular discussions with the First Minister on a range of issues including unemployment in Wales.

The Government recognise that certain sectors, particularly manufacturing, have experienced tough times, due largely to the world economic slowdown.

However, based on the non census adjusted figures for both Wales and the UK, there is evidence that we are closing the traditional gap between Welsh unemployment and UK unemployment. Welsh unemployment, at 5.3 per cent., is now barely higher than the comparable UK rate of 5.2 per cent.

22. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the Welsh Assembly on reducing long-term unemployment in Wales. [76079]

Peter Hain: The Government's long-term ambition is that by the end of the decade there will be a higher proportion of people in work than ever before.

Based on non-census adjusted figures for both Wales and the UK, there is evidence that we are closing the traditional gap between Welsh unemployment and UK unemployment. Welsh unemployment, at 5.3 per cent., is now barely higher than the comparable UK rate of 5.2 per cent.

Employment measures such as the New Deal have been a huge success in Wales and are having an impact on long-term unemployment. In total, some 6,300 long-term unemployed people in Wales have secured sustained jobs through New Deal between the start of the New Deal 25+ programme in July 1998 and June 2002, when the most recent figures were published.

Flooding

18. Matthew Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what actions have been taken to reduce flooding of the rivers Teme and Severn in areas which cross the Welsh-English border. [76074]

Peter Hain: Flood prevention measures to protect land and property in Wales are a matter for the National Assembly.

Cardiff Art Gallery

19. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales regarding the creation in Cardiff of a gallery for contemporary Welsh artists. [76076]

Peter Hain: Like my predecessor, I plan to have regular discussions with the First Minister about a range of matters affecting Wales.

On 19 June, the National Museums and Galleries of Wales published a consultation paper, 'Views of the Future', setting out options for displaying the nation's art collection, including the work of contemporary Welsh artists.

In due course, the museum will report on the outcome of this consultation to the Assembly's Culture Minister.

Dairy Farming

20. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on dairy farming in Wales. [76077]

Peter Hain: This is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Waiting Lists

21. Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the National Assembly for Wales regarding the length of waiting lists in Wales. [76078]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I will continue to meet the National Assembly First Minister and Health Minister regularly to discuss a range of issues including the length of waiting lists.

I know that the Assembly and Welsh Trusts are working on a range of initiatives to tackle waiting lists, including recruitment and retention plans and the appointment of out-patient managers to manage booking arrangements for patients attending clinics.

Drugs and Crime

23. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the co-ordination taking place between his Department, other Whitehall departments and the Wales Assembly to combat drug abuse and drug-related crime. [76080]

Mr. Touhig: The UK Government, both the Wales Office and other Whitehall Departments, are committed to working with the National Assembly for Wales to tackle drug abuse and drug-related crime in Wales; I have regular meetings with my Ministerial colleagues, both in Whitehall and in the Assembly, to discuss these issues.

The National Assembly has developed its own strategy for tackling substance misuse: "Tackling Substance Misuse: A Partnership Approach". This strategy focuses on the problems in Wales and has Welsh solutions. This is one of the strengths of devolution: it enables the unique situations in Wales to be addressed by solutions that are tailor made for our communities.

In addition, the UK Government, working in conjunction with the National Assembly, is working to tackle the underlying causes of social deprivation. People in more affluent areas have better opportunities and life choices than people in deprived areas, who may turn to drugs as a means of escaping from their lifestyles.

Ministerial Meetings

24. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how often has (a) he and (b) his Under-Secretary attended meetings of the (i) Agriculture, (ii) Justice and Home Affairs, (iii) Environment and (iv) Transport Councils of Ministers in (a) 2000 and (b) 2001; and if he will make a statement. [76081]

Peter Hain: Neither my predecessor nor the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has attended any meetings of the Council of Ministers.

Clearly there is a limit to the number of people who can participate in any one delegation. Where council meetings cover issues of particular interest to the devolved administrations, the priority must be to accommodate Ministers from the devolved Administrations wherever possible.

Assembly Ministers have attended numerous council meetings as part of the UK delegation, including seven meetings of the Agriculture Council and one Environment Council.

The Government are committed to involving the devolved Administrations in formulating the UK's policy position in Europe, wherever appropriate.

Steelworkers' Pensions

25. Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the National Assembly Government First Secretary and other Government colleagues concerning the pension situation of Welsh steel workers. [76082]

Peter Hain: My predecessor had regular meetings with Cabinet colleagues and the First Minister of the National Assembly for Wales and discussed a range of issues including steelworkers pensions. I will of course continue to take a close interest and this will include discussions with stakeholders.

The issue of ASW workers' pensions was also raised at Welsh Affairs Committee on 15 October 2002, at which my predecessor participated. The Government is trying to address the issue of security for pension scheme members and will consider this in the forthcoming Green Paper.

Welsh Language Broadcasting

26. Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on the promotion of digital broadcasting in the Welsh language throughout Wales. [76083]

Peter Hain: Like my predecessor I plan to have regular discussions with ministerial colleagues and Assembly Ministers about a wide range of matters affecting Wales.

The Government recognises the key role which S4C plays in nurturing and developing the Welsh language throughout Wales, and the importance of their moving forward with the development of their digital service.

Education

27. Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh Assembly about cross-border needs for further education provision. [76084]

Mr. Touhig: I regularly meet Welsh Assembly colleagues to discuss a range of issues, including further education provision.

Community Safety

28. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary on community safety, and if he will make a statement. [76085]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with Assembly Ministers about matters affecting Wales.

The Assembly and the Crime Reduction Unit for Wales have key roles in promoting community safety.

We have seen a period of intense activity which has resulted in the local partnership approach making a real impact, backed by funding of £22 million from the Government and the National Assembly.

Proportional Representation

29. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the consequences of the use of proportional representation in Assembly elections. [76086]

Peter Hain: The electoral system is a matter reserved to Parliament under the devolution settlement and the Government have no plans to bring forward legislation to change it.

Redundant Steelworkers

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to work with the National Assembly to help the steelmakers made redundant at Allied Steel and Wire in Cardiff. [76066]

Peter Hain: My predecessor the right hon. Member for Torfaen maintained regular contact with the National Assembly for Wales and the First Minister on the plight of Allied Steel and Wire and of its workers.

He recently met South Wales representatives of the National Association of British Steel Pensioners together with my right hon. Friend, the member for Aberavon, to listen to their concerns about law reform.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many referrals for suspected benefit fraud were generated by his most recent television advertising campaign; and what proportion of these resulted in (a) a full investigation and (b) successful prosecution or other penalty. [74848]

Malcolm Wicks: Referrals come to the Department from many sources and it is not possible to identify separately those generated by the television advertising campaign. The primary objectives of the Targeting Fraud campaign are to positively reinforce honest behaviour, to create a climate of intolerance to benefit fraud and to undermine its social acceptability, rather than specifically to invite fraud referrals. Evaluation shows that public attitudes are moving in a positive direction as a result of the campaign.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much is paid to a postmaster who reports a case of suspected benefit fraud; and what plans he has to increase this amount. [74845]

Malcolm Wicks: The amount of the award which may currently be paid to a postmaster who reports a case of suspected instrument of payment fraud is £10.00. In cases where Post Office staff show exceptional diligence, a reward of £25.00 may be considered. There are no current plans to increase these amounts.

Child Benefit Claims

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has for allowing claims to child benefit to be made electronically. [78859]

Malcolm Wicks: The draft Order to enable claims for child benefit to be made was approved by both Houses inJuly. From October 28 2002 our customers are able to make a claim or report a change of circumstances electronically via the internet.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the successful bidders for the second round of the Starter Home Initiative and indicate how much each one will receive. [75967]

Mr. McNulty: The list of successful bidders for Starter Home Initiative Round 2 funding and the allocations made to each one are set out in the table below. Some of the bidders are assisting key workers across a number of local authority areas.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what definition of key workers her department is using in the Starter Homes Initiative. [76589]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The Starter Home Initiative is assisting primarily teachers in schools, police, nurses and other health workers to buy their first home. Bids for Starter Home Initiative funding were also invited to assist other key workers, and as a result some social workers, care workers, occupational therapists, fire fighters and transport workers are also being assisted.

Rural Planning

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with rural organisations on the subject of developing the capacity of parish and town councils to handle more of the planning process. [76992]

Mr. McNulty: The Deputy Prime Minister has had a number of discussions with rural organisations, including the Countryside Agency, where he has discussed the role of parish councils in the planning process.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's officials have also had discussions with the Countryside Agency and the National Association of Local Councils on the role of parish and town councils more generally.

Affordable Housing, Salisbury

Mr. Key: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many units of affordable housing have been built in Salisbury constituency in each year since 1997. [77231]

Mr. McNulty: Figures for the actual provision of affordable housing in Salisbury constituency including all new affordable housing as at 1st April for each year for the period 1997–2002, are as follows:

1997—86 units

1999—116 units
2000—85 units
2001—138 units
2002—121 units

A total of 651 affordable housing units were provided over the period 1997–2002 at an average of 108 per year.

Domestic Hedges

Laurence Robertson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to introduce legislation to limit the height of domestic hedges; and if he will make a statement. [77048]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon Member to the answer given to the hon Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Simon Thomas) on 22 October 2002, Official Report, column 290W.

Urban Summit

Llew Smith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on (a) events organised for, (b) planned release of documents at and (c) number of registrants for the Urban Simmit in Birmingham at the end of October. [77234]

Mr. McNulty: The Urban Summit will be held on 31 October and 1 November at the International Convention Centre in Birmingham. The Summit will include plenary sessions with keynote speakers and panel sessions, as well as 28 Themed Sessions, nine site visits and over 20 fringe events. All announcements regarding documents to be published at the Summit will take place shortly. The Urban Summit is for 1500 delegates and all places have been allocated.

Home Demolition

David Wright: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many public and private sector homes were demolished in England in 2001–02 in each local authority area. [77300]

Mr. McNulty: Private sector dwelling demolitions funded by local authorities and local authority dwelling demolitions totalled 15.2 thousand in 2000–01, the latest year for which a breakdown by local authority area is available. Demolitions of local authority dwellings amounted to 13.9 thousand, and the numbers in each local authority area are available in the Libraries of the House.

Mobile Phone Masts

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) pursuant to the answer to the honourable Member for Tunbridge Wells of 24 June, Official Report, column 672W, on mobile phone masts, what assessment his Department and the Working Group have made of the proposed Deloitte & Touche review of the 10 Commitments voluntary code of practice adopted by the five mobile telephone operators; [77004]

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that the review of the code of practice adopted by the five mobile telephone operators includes the extent to which (a) members of the public, (b) school governors, (c) councillors and (d) other interested parties were consulted on siting and erection of mobile phone masts as per Commitment 1 of that code. [77003]

Mr. McNulty: The review by Deloitte & Touche, commissioned by the Federation of Electronics Industry (FEI), is a thorough assessment of the operators' ten commitments. The review has not yet been completed, but we expect to see the results by the end of 2002.

Commitment 1 by the mobile phone operators is to develop, with other stakeholders clear standards and procedures to deliver significantly improved consultation with local communities. The operators' performance against this will be assessed as part of the review and Deloitte and Touche will be talking to local community groups and local authorities.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library copies of the site share statistics for mobile telecommunications masts. [77616]

Mr. McNulty: The site share statistics for mobile telecommunications masts are gathered on behalf of the telecommunications industry by the Federation of Electronics Industry (FEI).

They are collated quarterly and show: the numbers of mast that are sharable; the numbers that are shared; and the percentage of shared masts to shareable masts. We will place the latest version of the statistics in the Library at the earliest opportunity.

Firemen's Strike

Mr. Burns: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) in the eventuality of a firemen's strike how many (a) green goddesses and (b) armed forces personnel will be stationed in (i) Essex and (ii) Mid Essex to provide fire cover and other services and where they will be stationed; [77138]

(2) in the eventuality of a firemen's strike in Essex what specialist training will armed forces personnel receive to deal with fires and other emergencies; what duties will armed forces personnel be allowed to carry out; what duties that firemen currently carry out will not be performed by armed services personnel; and how many retained firemen are expected to carry on working and provide cover for fire fighting and other emergencies; [77139]

(3) if he will make a statement on the contingency plans to provide cover for accidents and fires in Essex if there is a firemen's strike [77140]

Mr. Raynsford: Emergency cover in Essex, as with the rest of the country, will consist of a number of elements including Green Goddess crews, breathing apparatus teams, rescue teams equipped with specialist equipment and the police. The provision of MOD emergency fire cover has been planned in consultation with the Chief Fire Officer to maximise call-out response times and the availability of a range of firefighting capabilities.

Personnel have been trained and equipped to provide basic emergency fire and rescue cover. The level of training is dependent on the skills already held by personnel and the role that they would perform in the event of a strike. Drivers and basic crew only require a short training package because of the simple nature of the equipment and because of the basic level of cover given. Fire Rescue Teams fulfil a more difficult role, which utilises technical equipment in dangerous situation. Some Fire Rescue Teams are already trained and experienced in the use of breathing apparatus and other specialist equipment but additional personnel have also been trained in these techniques. Other support training as well as driver training includes first aid training and specialist equipment maintenance training. Basic training lasts up to five weeks, depending on skill levels and role, plus any other necessary follow on training.

The command and operational structure for emergency fire cover has been designed to enable maximum flexibility and use of available resources, whether from within a county or from assets deployed nearby in neighbouring counties. The fire crews will use a number of temporary stations across the country but the deployment of fire fighters will be based on the assessment of how best to respond to an emergency in the quickest time possible.

Retained Firefighters provide a very valuable service to their communities. We anticipate that in the event of industrial action, many retained firefighters will continue to protect the communities in which they live and work.

The MOD's emergency cover will not replicate the fire fighting capabilities of the Fire Service, but will minimise, as far as possible, the danger to human life. Service personnel will provide basic fire and rescue cover.

Sustainable Development

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what assessment his Department has made of the role of a legally binding framework relating to the delivery and auditing of sustainable development by local authorities; [77584]

(2) what steps are being taken by his Department to allow local authorities to (a) increase self-determination and control and (b) increase local accountability of the delivery of sustainable development objectives; [77583]

Christopher Leslie: The Local Government Act 2000 placed a duty on local authorities to prepare community strategies for promoting the economic, social and environmental well being of their communities and contributing to sustainable development in the UK. Our guidance does not stipulate a timetable for the preparation of community strategies but we have introduced a statutory Best Value Performance Indicator to report on the progress of each authority.

The Local Government White Paper Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services introduced a national framework for assessing the performance of authorities which shifts the focus to the delivery of outcomes. The cornerstone of this framework is the Comprehensive Performance Assessment (CPA) which will provide local people with clear and concise information about their council's performance. The Government is also committed to giving local authorities greater freedom to deliver by removing unnecessary bureaucracy. In addition to the action taken for all authorities, CPA will be used as the basis for offering extra freedoms to the best performers. We expect that such authorities will use these freedoms to deliver sustainable improvements to the quality of life of their communities. We intend to announce the details shortly.

National Assembly for Wales

Ian Lucas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received from the National Assembly for Wales concerning the Richard Commission on the Assembly's powers and electoral arrangements. [77648]

Mr. McNulty: The Welsh Assembly Government intends the Commission to operate independently. How it conducts its work is a matter for the right hon. Lord Richard QC and his colleagues.

Rent Charges

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the ability of local authorities to waive amounts owed by a pensioner who has stayed in hospital beyond the current maximum time limit before benefit claw-back becomes liable. [77843]

Mr. Raynsford: The setting and collection of rents, including decisions on whether or not to waive rent charges for local authority tenants in particular circumstances is a matter for local discretion.

Any such decision may be influenced by the application and interpretation of Housing Benefit rules which are the reponsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Member for Oxford East.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. David: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the basis on which monies under the Community Regeneration Trust are allocated to England, Wales and Scotland. [77975]

Mr. McNulty: Funding for the Coalfields Regeneration Trust is a devolved issue. My office provides core funding for the Trust's activities in England, the Welsh Assembly provides core funding for the Trust's activities in Wales and the Scottish Executive provides core funding for the Trust's activities in Scotland.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Government of Sudan regarding the transparency of Sudan's oil revenues. [74888]

Mr. Macshane: We have not made representations recently because this issue is being handled at the peace talks at Machakos.

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in the peace process in Sudan. [76606]

Mr. Macshane: The UK government is actively engaged in the peace process in Sudan. The UK Special Representative for Sudan, Alan Goulty, is leading the UK observer delegation at the peace talks. He and his team work closely with the mediators. We also carry out intensive consultations with the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Khartoum and elsewhere. We co-ordinate our efforts with international partners.

Mr. Ian Stillman

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation of Mr. Ian Stillman, who is in an Indian prison. [75964]

Mike O'Brien: Mr. Stillman is a long term resident of India who is physically handicapped. He was arrested and convicted on narcotics charges and has been in prison in Himachal Pradesh since 28 August 2000. We are very concerned about his welfare and are in close touch with him and his family. We have raised his case with the Government of India on many occasions. Most recently my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister spoke with the Prime Minister of India, Mr. Vajpayee, on 12 October and I spoke with the Indian Foreign Secretary on 16 October.

Our High Commission in New Delhi will be following up these conversations with the Government of India to clarify the next steps in Mr. Stillman's case, as well as pursuing with the Himachal Pradesh authorities practical questions relating to Mr. Stillman's welfare. I very much hope that he will be released from prison soon.

Angola

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made with the clearance of landmines in Angola. [76743]

Mr. Macshane: A total of eight demining NGOs, including two British (HALO Trust and Mines Advisory Group (MAG)) are active in Angola. The cessation of military hostilities earlier this year has allowed them access to areas previously inaccessible because of insecurity.

According to data available from the Angolan Government, NGOs, and UNICEF/UNDP sources, humanitarian demining agencies in Angola have in 2002 collectively worked on a total of 35 minefields, of which 29 have been completely cleared. This work has involved clearing a total of 1.5 million square metres of mined/suspect land and more than 500 km of road. A further 3.5 million square metres have been surveyed during the same period in the provinces of Cunene, Benguela, Bié, Huambo, Kuanza Norte, Luanda, Malanje and Moxico. Throughout the course of the year demining NGOs have uncovered and destroyed over 2,000 anti-personnel landmines, 176 anti-tank mines and 28,000 items of unexploded ordnance (UXO).

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with (a) the MDC and (b) the UN over investigations by the UN Commission on Human Rights of human rights abuses in Zimbabwe. [76905]

Mr. Macshane: FCO Ministers and officials have regular discussions with the Movement for Democratic Change (MDC) and other opposition and civil society groups, on developments in Zimbabwe. The UK supported the EU's draft resolution on Zimbabwe at the UN Commission on Human Rights in April this year in Geneva. Officials have regular contact with UN officials at all levels.

Rough Diamonds

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions (a) her Department and (b) other Government departments have had with participant governments regarding the development of national action plans in preparation for the establishment of an international certification scheme for rough diamonds. [77062]

Mr. Macshane: I have been asked to reply.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is the lead department for the Kimberley Process international certification Scheme for rough diamonds, which we expect to start in January 2003.

The European Commission has issued a draft Regulation, setting out how the Kimberley Process will be implemented in the EC. The FCO has submitted an Explanatory Memorandum for parliamentary scrutiny, in advance of final approval of the Regulation by the Council.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is setting up a Government Diamond Office to implement the Regulation within the UK and is preparing guidance for companies.

We have had discussions with a number of other participants about their implementation and understand that they are also in the process of completing their plans for implementation.

Shener Levent

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights implications of the forthcoming trial of Shener Levent of the Afrika newspaper in Northern Cyprus. [77089]

Mr. Macshane: I am disappointed that Sener Levent is again being tried in court for publishing articles critical of the Turkish Cypriot authorities. I condemn all attacks on press freedom, and call upon the Turkish Cypriot authorities to ensure full respect for the right to freedom of expression of Sener Levent and all Turkish Cypriots. The British Government made official representations when Sener Levent and Memduh Ener were imprisoned in August and we will continue to follow this case closely.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what steps are being taken to ensure that communications between weapons inspectors working in Iraq with the United Nations are secure; and if he will make a statement. [77280]

Mr. Macshane: It is the responsibility of UNMOVIC to ensure its readiness to operate effectively on the ground in Iraq.

UNMOVIC have told us that they have identified, but not yet procured, a range of new technologies and equipment that should ensure encrypted communications of both voice and data between inspectors in Iraq and the UN offices in New York and Vienna as well as internally within the UN Monitoring Centre in Baghdad.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the text of the resolution prepared by the United States and United Kingdom for the United Nations Security Council in respect of action to be taken against Iraq to permit international inspectors and to destroy its weapons of mass destruction. [77222]

Mr. Macshane: The draft resolution is under discussion at the United Nations Security Council in New York. A copy will be placed in the House Libraries when it has been agreed.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to ensure that weapons inspectors are reintroduced and active in Iraq as soon as is possible. [77509]

Mr. Macshane: Discussions on a new Security Council resolution focusing on Iraqi disarmament and the return of weapons inspectors to Iraq are continuing in New York. Planning by the Executive Chairman of UNMOVIC and the Director General of the IAEA for their inspection teams to enter Iraq is at an advanced stage, and they expect to be ready to do so soon after the resolution has been adopted.

Turkey

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what recent discussions he has had with Turkey about EU enlargement. [77032]

Mr. Macshane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met Foreign Minister Gurel on 24 September during his visit to London. They spent much of the meeting discussing EU Enlargement, with particular reference to Cyprus and Turkey. HMG welcomes the major reforms that Turkey has adopted in recent months and believes that Turkish accession to the EU would be in the best interests of Britain and of Europe as a whole.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the outcome was of the General Affairs Council held on 21st to 22nd October; what the Government's stance was on each issue discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [76930]

Mr. Macshane: My right honourable friend the Foreign Secretary and the then Minister for Europe represented the UK at the General Affairs and External Relations Council in Luxembourg on 21/22 October. Conclusions were agreed by consensus and no formal votes were taken. The Council adopted the "A" points listed in document 12354/1/02 PTS 44. Copies of this document will be placed in the Library of the House.

PREPARATION OF THE EUROPEAN COUNCIL (BRUSSELS 24/25 OCTOBER)

Enlargement

Delegations welcomed Ireland's ratification of the Nice Treaty and broadly supported the annotated draft agenda for the European Council in accordance with new procedures agreed at Seville. The Council confirmed that ten countries were expected to accede to the EU by 2004 and that accession negotiations with these countries should be concluded at the Copenhagen European Council, with signature of the accession Treaty following in Athens in April 2003.

The Council also supported the Commission's evaluation of Romania and Bulgaria's progress, noting the Commission's plan to present updated pre-accession strategies for these countries at the Copenhagen European Council. Turkey's recent and substantial progress was also noted.

Agreement was found on the institutional questions (weighting of votes in the Council; QMV threshold; future size of the European Paliament and seat allocation).

The Council also agreed the EU Common Position on the Competition Policy Chapter with the Czech Republic. Consultations on this with Slovakia will continue.

Kaliningrad

The Council took stock of discussions with Lithuania and the Russian Federation and expressed the hope that a solution could be agreed at the EU/Russia summit on 11 November. The Council proposed that the following elements should be contained in the package: (i) Lithuania should implement national border control regulations by January 2003, in line with chapter 24 of the EU Accession Treaty; (ii) the Facilitated Transit Document (FTD) should be available as of January 2003, in accordance with the Commission communication of 18 September 2002; and (iii) use of Russian passports, FTDs and other valid travel documents should be sanctioned by Lithuania until December 2004, for transit by train.

FLOODS: ESTABLISHMENT OF AN EU SOLIDARITY FUND

The Council, Commission and Parliament have jointly agreed to a draft Institutional Agreement to establish an EU Solidarity Fund. Signature to the Agreement and formal adoption of the regulation by the Council will proceed as soon as possible, enabling the EU to demonstrate its solidarity with the victims of recent floods in Central Europe.

External Relations

MIDDLE EAST

The Council took stock of the situation, following High Representative Solana's readout of 'Quartet' discussions on the roadmap towards achieving a comprehensive settlement by 2005. Ministers condemned the terrorist attack in Hadera, Northern Israel and expressed concern about the humanitarian situation in the Middle East.

WESTERN BALKANS

Albania

The Council authorised the Commission to open negotiations for a Stabilisation and Association Agreement with Albania, in parallel to the Consultative Task Force (CTF) meetings, which will encourage further reforms.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

The Council noted the October election results, complimenting the authorities' efficient organisation but stating that the low turnout was disappointing. The Council called for the early creation of new governments committed to vigorous reform. The Council reconfirmed the EU's commitment to work actively with the new authorities to this end.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)

The Council regretted that the 13 October election turnout was insufficient to enable the election of a new President in Serbia. It urged all political parties to work together to ensure that the process of selecting a new President would be conducted in a manner safeguarding democratic stability in a period of reform.

KIMBERLEY PROCESS

The Council supported the Kimberley process' aim to establish an international certification scheme for global trade in rough diamonds. It agreed to take the necessary steps to support this and adopted a Declaration to this effect.

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

The Council took stock of preparations for the EU-Russia Summit, to be held in Copenhagen on 11 November 2002. The Summit is expected to assess the Russia-EU Partnership and Cooperation Agreement, and will discuss EU enlargement plus international issues.

Council conclusions were adopted on the establishment of an EU-Iran human rights dialogue. The Council welcomed Iran's agreement to this dialogue and underlined its concern at current violations of civil and political rights.

INDONESIA: TERRORIST ATTACK IN BALI

The Council condemned the attacks of 12 October. It reaffirmed the EU's long-term commitment to the fight against terrorism and the need for the international community to act together.

IVORY COAST

The Council was briefed by the Presidency and the French delegation on the latest developments. The Council condemned the violence in Cote d'Ivoire, reiterating its attachment for the principles of the African Union, which condemns any recourse to force in order to obtain political change. It also welcomed the cease-fire agreement and offered support to ECOWAS mediation efforts.

ESDP

Ministers had an exchange on the state of play concerning EU-NATO relations.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the situation in the Ituri region of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [77330]

Mr. Macshane: The security and humanitarian situation in the Ituri region remains serious as a result of ethnic clashes and fighting between rebel groups. The United Nations Secretary General has asked the Ugandan Peoples Defence Force (UPDF) to stay in the Ituri region to provide law and order, until an alternative Congolese force can perform this role. The UN peacekeeping operation has also been asked to increase its presence in Ituri.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian assistance is being provided to the Ituri region of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [77329]

Mr. Macshane: The UK is not at present providing any direct humanitarian assistance to the Ituri region. UK assistance to the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) is focused on human rights projects. Relief assistance is provided through the UN and international NGOs. This year the UK expects to spend over £14 million in the DRC on direct humanitarian and conflict resolution assistance.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Uganda to ensure that its remaining forces in the Ituri region of the Democratic Republic of Congo cease partisan involvement in ethnic conflict; and if he will make a statement. [77328]

Mr. Macshane: The United Nations Secretary General has asked the Ugandan Peoples Defence Force (UPDF) to stay in the Ituri region to provide law and order, until an alternative Congolese force can perform this role. The UK has reminded the Ugandan Government of the UPDF obligations to the local population.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which UK companies were named in the report to the UN on 21st October by the UN Panel on Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as violating OECD guidelines; what representations have been made to these companies; and what action will be taken. [77059]

Mr. Macshane: Twelve UK registered companies are amongst the 85 listed in Annex III of the UN Panel report (S2002/1146), which can be found on the UN website (www.un.org). The Panel alleges that these companies have violated the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises. The report does not go into detail. We have encouraged the companies that have contacted us to seek further information from the UN. We are considering a substantive response to the report's recommendations.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recommendations made by the report to the UN of 21st October by the UN Panel on Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources in the Democratic Republic of Congo, with particular reference to the recommendation to impose financial restrictions on companies and individuals involved in abuses; and if he will make a statement. [77058]

Mr. Macshane: We welcome the report, which recommends a wide range of potential actions. We are considering a substantive response. It is too early to comment on specific proposals.

United Nations Day

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government has to mark United Nations Day. [77237]

Mr. Macshane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs issued a press statement on 24 October to mark United Nations Day.

That evening my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development was guest speaker at a UN Day reception at her Department's Headquarters hosted by the United Nations Information Centre (UNIC).

Uganda

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Uganda regarding the raid on the offices of the Monitor newspaper. [76974]

Mr. Macshane: I refer to the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr Nigel Waterson) on 22 October Official Report, column 201W.

Poland

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Poland. [77365]

Mr. Macshane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met his Polish opposite member in London in July and hopes to make his second official visit to Poland in due course.

EU Enlargement

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Swedish Foreign Minister regarding (a) EU enlargement and (b) the euro. [77364]

Mr. Macshane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs meets his Swedish counterpart Anna Lindh, regularly in the margins of the EU General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC). The Secretary of State visited Sweden on 29-30 August 2002. He most recently met Anna Lindh at the European Council on 24-25 October 2002. Discussions have covered the range of EU topics including EU Enlargement and the Euro.

Irish Referendum

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the result of the Irish referendum and its implications for the EU. [77368]

Mr. Macshane: I am very pleased that the Irish people voted in favour of the Treaty of Nice. Nice is necessary for enlargement to take place smoothly by 2004. Enlargement is essential for European stability, security and prosperity. However, important and difficult negotiations lie ahead between now and the Copenhagen European Council in December.

Cameroon

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights situation in Cameroon; and whether he has identified an improvement since the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture visited that country in 1999, with particular reference to the use of torture. [77629]

Mr. Macshane: The UK continues to be concerned about the human rights situation in Cameroon. We continue to use every available opportunity, bilaterally and through the EU and Commonwealth, to bring pressure upon the Government of Cameroon to implement substantial human rights and governance reform generally. We do not believe that there have been substantial improvements to the situation since the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture's report in 1999.

The FCO's Anti-Torture Initiative was established in October 1998. Phase 3 of the initiative was launched in July this year and was marked in Cameroon by a joint British Council-British High Commission seminar aimed at raising awareness of the issue in Cameroon.

The British High Commission in Yaounde has funded projects to provide human rights training for the forces of law and order, and works with local NGOs to promote action on human rights problems.

Collective Defence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's policy is on the question raised in the note by Mr. M Barnier to Members of the Convention on the Future of Europe, CONV 264/02, as to whether an undertaking of collective defence should be enshrined in the Treaty on European Union. [77819]

Mike O'Brien: The Government's policy, and the policy to which the EU collectively committed itself at the European Council of Nice in December 2000, is that NATO remains the basis for the collective defence of its members.

Iran

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his visit to Iran; and what discussions he has had with Iran in its role in seeking to resolve the dispute between the Palestinians and the Government of Israel. [78308]

Mike O'Brien: During his visit to Iran on 9 October, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed a number of regional issues, including the Middle East Peace Process, with both President Khatami and Foreign Minister Kharrazi. He urged the Iranians actively to support a two state solution and to cease any support to those opposing the Peace Process. We therefore welcome the statement by the Iranian MFA spokesman on 15 October that Iran would not reject a two state solution provided it was acceptable to the Palestinians and Israelis.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the purpose and objective of their policy of sanctions against Iran; and if he will make a statement. [78307]

Mike O'Brien: It is for the US to explain their policy on Iran. Our own policy is one of critical engagement with Iran.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when (a) a Minister and (b) an official within his Department last visited Pitcairn Island. [77685]

Mike O'Brien: No Minister has visited Pitcairn recently. An FCO official accompanied the Governor on a visit to the island in 1995.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a Governor of Pitcairn Island last visited the territory. [77686]

Mike O'Brien: The Governor of Pitcairn is due to visit Pitcairn in November. The previous Governor visited the island in September 2000. The previous Deputy Governor spent six weeks on the island in November/December 2001.

Member to a Ministry of Defence Departmental Minute dated 22 July, which is available in the Library of the House of Commons and which gives full details of non-lethal military equipment to be gifted to the Government of Nepal, including those made from the Global Conflict Prevention Pool Fund.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

2012 Olympics

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what commitment she has received from the Mayor of London to provide support for the staging of the 2012 Olympics in London; [78565]

(2) if she will publish the Ove Arup report on the likely cost of a bid to stage the 2012 Olympics; [78566]

(3) what commitment she has received from the Chancellor of the Exchequer to provide public funds to support the staging of the 2012 Olympics in London. [78564]

Mr. Caborn: The summary of the Arup report on the costs and benefits of bidding for and staging an Olympic games in London 2012 will be published on 1 November 2002. Copies will be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

The report estimates the cost of staging the Olympic games at £2 billion and the cost of bidding at £13 million. We have learnt that the risk associated with hosting an event of the magnitude of the Olympic games is significant and it is our responsibility to the tax payer that this risk is properly assessed.

All stakeholders and relevant Government Departments, including the GLA and the Treasury, are analysing this report and the Government will give careful consideration to the costs, benefits and risks involved before we announce our decision on whether to support a bid to host the games in 2012. We aim to make that decision by the end of the year.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she expects to publish the ARUP report on the costs and benefits of staging the 2012 Olympic games in London; and if she will make a statement. [79204]

Mr. Caborn: The summary of the Arup report on the costs and benefits of bidding for and staging an Olympic games in London 2012 will be published on 1 November 2002. Copies will be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

This report has been commissioned jointly by my Department, the London Development Agency, the British Olympic Association and UK Sport.

The report estimates the cost of staging the Olympic games at £2 billion, and the cost of bidding at £13 million. We have learnt that the risk associated with hosting an event of the magnitude of the Olympic games is significant and it is our responsibility to the tax payer that this risk is properly assessed.

All stakeholders and relevant Government Departments are currently analysing this report and the Government will give careful consideration to the costs, benefits and risks involved before we announce our decision on whether to support a bid to host the games in 2012. We aim to make that decision by the end of the year.

Departmental Logo

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the design of her Department's logo. [78346]

Dr. Howells: The logo, and the visual identity of which it is a part, was introduced in February 1999 following the Department's name change. The identity was designed to improve the consistency and distinctiveness of DCMS communications and to achieve better value for money in design and print purchasing.

The introduction of the identity resulted in year on year savings of over 25 per cent. on the procurement of the Department's printed stationery.

Gambling

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent estimate she has made of the level of problem gambling in the UK. [77517]

Mr. Caborn: The most recent authoritative estimate remains that noted in the report of the Gambling Review Body (Cm 5206), that between 0.6 per cent. and 0.8 per cent. of the adult population of Great Britain are problem gamblers.

Job Advertisements

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many non-devolved posts were advertised in the press in each year from June 1999; and what percentage of them were advertised in the Scottish press. [76850]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has not advertised any post in the press since June 1999 which deals exclusively with departmental responsibilities which extend to Scotland.

Radio Industry

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on her assessment of the impact of the Communications Bill on the independent radio industry. [76428]

Dr. Howells: Our general approach to the radio industry, and to communications markets in general, is deregulatory. Format controls and ownership restrictions will both be relaxed. However, we recognise the importance of maintaining the distinctive local basis of commercial radio. We therefore propose to retain key local ownership rules, and to give Ofcom a duty to protect and promote local content.

Rate Relief

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions she has had with (a) charities and (b) sports clubs on rate relief; and if she will make a statement. [78410]

Mr. Caborn: The Government announced in April that community amateur sports clubs will now be eligible to apply for charitable status, under which they would receive mandatory 80 per cent. rate relief and other tax advantages. The recent Finance Act 2002 also included a package of tax reliefs available from the Inland Revenue that will benefit such clubs.

In July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met several of sport's governing bodies, as representatives of community amateur sports clubs, to discuss these measures and other issues. In September, my Department arranged a seminar which was designed to give sport's governing bodies the chance to discuss the tax and charitable status options available to amateur clubs. Since the Budget, my Department has met representatives from Sport England, the Central Council of Physical Recreation and the National Playing Fields Association on a number of occasions to discuss these issues. I will continue to work with these organisations and with governing bodies to agree the best way forward for helping these clubs.

Tourism

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals she has for the reform of Government support for tourism; and if she will make a statement. [79130]

Tessa Jowell: I announced new arrangements for support for tourism in the English regions on 13 May. Since then I have agreed with the Regional Development Agencies that they are ready to implement this, corporate planning guidance has been issued about how the RDAs should plan for the new tourism responsibilities and further planning work is in hand.

I also proposed changes for the English Tourism Council and to improve the co-ordination of marketing activity for England. I have decided to achieve this by a radical reform of the existing support structures, and there are two aspects to the announcement that I make today.

The first will result in a strengthening of the marketing of Britain in overseas tourism markets. This will be of direct benefit not only to England but also to Scotland and Wales. I had already asked the new Chief Executive of the British Tourism Authority, Tom Wright, to carry out a fundamental review of strategy and structure of support for British tourism overseas. The emerging conclusions point to increasing effectiveness with a structure based on dedicated new hubs for each major market and less emphasis on central services. More resource will be concentrated where it is needed most, that is in the overseas markets served by the BTA. I will also improve the accountability arrangements for BTA in co-operation with other GB Tourism Ministers.

The second aspect of my announcement concerns the need for better co-ordination of the marketing of England as a tourism destination in the GB market. We wish to combine some of the day-to-day operations of the English Tourism Council with the BTA. These two organisations have served tourism well, but combining their resources and strengths allows us to develop more quickly the marketing team for England we need. This will also enable us to put more resource into direct support for tourism and less into overheads. We will take this opportunity to develop more effective partnerships with private industry investors to support tourism. We will pursue our commitment to the sustainable development of tourism, particularly in rural areas, some of which are still in recovery following the foot-and-mouth outbreak.

Accordingly, I am today asking Tom Wright to broaden the BTA reform programme and to draw up detailed plans for a further unit to lead and co-ordinate the marketing of England, promoting destinations to customers within our own country. Funding for this activity, and other activities of the relaunched national organisation in support of English tourism, will be accounted for and reported to Parliament separately from action in overseas markets on behalf of all three parts of Britain.

In England, I see a major leadership role for both the private sector and the Regional Development Agencies in developing a coherent marketing agenda across the industry. The new marketing team for English tourism within the relaunched national organisation will be guided by a slimmed down English Tourist Board, drawing on support from the private sector and regional and local government. The broad remit for its work has been drawn up by a group drawn from the private and public sectors, which was fully endorsed at a meeting I chaired of a wide range of tourism bodies at the beginning of August. The team will have responsibility for working closely with RDA and other partners to make the most of the public funds available to support marketing and promotion.

I have asked Alan Britten and David Quarmby, the chairs of the existing boards, to work closely together to ensure the new arrangements are implemented quickly and effectively. Staff from both organisations will be treated on an equal and fair basis, taking full account of their own skills and experience and the requirements of the new arrangements. I have asked them to make recommendations about the new name when they have made further progress on the reforms.

I am also announcing additional funding for tourism services in England. £10 million over three years is available, but will only be released on the effective implementation of reform, on industry rising to the challenge by coming together with matching funds, and the delivery of increased productivity we are looking for in the tourism industry.

DEFENCE

Anthrax

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the anthrax innoculation programme offered to (a) Navy, (b) Army, (c) Air Force and (d) other Ministry of Defence personnel is compulsory; [78101]

(2) what proportion of (a) Navy, (b) Army, (c) Air Force and (d) other Ministry of Defence personnel (i) are fully vaccinated and (ii) have commenced a vaccination programme against anthrax; and if he will make a statement. [78100]

Dr. Moonie: In keeping with long-standing medical practice, immunisation against anthrax for the Armed Forces and other Ministry of Defence personnel is voluntary and on the basis of informed consent.

Up to and including September 2002, the period for which most recent figures are available, approximately 46 per cent. of personnel offered immunisation against anthrax had accepted. Broken down by the categories requested this equates to (a) Royal Navy 28 per cent. (b) Army 78 per cent. (c) Royal Air Force 46 per cent. and (d) other Ministry of Defence Personnel 61 per cent. Thus far, immunisation against anthrax has been targeted at a small number of personnel in the most readily deployable units. As approximate proportions of their total strengths, excluding reserves, this equates to (a) Royal Navy, 0.7 per cent. (b) Army 0.4 per cent.; (c) Royal Air Force, 4.5 per cent.; and (d) other Ministry of Defence personnel 0.2 per cent.. Information concerning individuals' current anthrax immunisation status is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Earlier this year we announced a decision to expand the programme so that all service personnel, including reserves, and those essential civilians who are likely to deploy on operations are routinely offered immunisation against anthrax. We plan to expand the programme gradually over the next few years, beginning with those units that are held at the highest readiness. I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave on 13 June 2002, Official Report, columns 1343–44 to the hon. Member for High Peak (Mr. Levitt).

Arms Sales

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) countries and (b) organisations outside the UK to whom sale of arms and arms components is prohibited. [76533]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom has arms embargoes in place in respect of the following countries pursuant to European Union sanctions: Bosnia/Herzegovina; Libya; Burma; Sudan; China (not full scope); the Democratic Republic of Congo and Zimbabwe.

The United Kingdom has arms embargoes in place in respect of Armenia and Azerbaijan pursuant to Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe sanctions. There is also a unilateral arms embargo in place in respect of Iran (not full scope).

Although the scope of the embargo varies from country to country depending on the wording of the source instrument, arms embargoes are in general implemented in the UK by prohibiting the export of goods and technology on the Military List. The Military List forms Part III of the Export of Goods (control) Order 1994 as amended.

An up to date list of all export restrictions applicable in the UK is available on www.dti.gov.uk/export. control.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are in place to ensure that arms and arms components sold abroad are not acquired by (a) countries and (b) organisations outside the UK to whom sale of arms and arms components is prohibited. [76534]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

Exports of arms and other goods controlled for strategic reasons are subject to export licences issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. All individual licence applications are assessed against the Consolidated EU and National Arms Exporting Licensing Criteria. Criterion 1A of the consolidated criteria makes clear that the Government will not issue a licence if approval would be inconsistent with the UK's international obligations and its commitments to enforce UN, OSCE and EU arms embargoes, as well as national embargoes observed by the UK.

The Government focus their efforts on assessment of potential end-use at the export licensing stage. This includes checks made by our posts overseas where necessary. Carrying out effective risk assessment on end-users before making the export licensing decision is the surest way of preventing arms from falling into the wrong hands. In addition the Government remain committed to carrying out end-use monitoring of exports in those circumstances where this will genuinely add value to our efforts to minimise the risk of misuse and diversion and where such monitoring is practicable. Our overseas posts have standing instructions to report on allegations of misuse of any UK-origin defence equipment. We take these reports into account in our assessment.

Officials from across Whitehall co-operate to pursue possible breaches of sanctions in the UK and abroad. Breaches involving the sale of UK arms and components sold abroad are thoroughly investigated by the relevant authorities.

Correspondence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the statement by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 17 October 2002, Official Report, column 570, when the letter to the hon. Member for North Essex on the relationship between NATO and the European Security and Defence Policy will be sent; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [78102]

Mr. Ingram: I replied to the hon. Member on 30 October.

D-Day (60th Anniversary)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what preparations will be made for the 60th anniversary of D Day; and if he will make a statement. [78419]

Dr. Moonie: Although preparations have not been concluded, the intention is for the Government and Armed Forces to be represented at ministerial and senior officer level at parades and services in Normandy being organised by the French Comité du Debarquement. The Army will provide a band. Appropriate representation will also be provided at a service of remembrance and thanksgiving which will take place at St. Paul's Cathedral.

Doctors

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many doctors were serving in (a) the RAF, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Navy in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [78272]

Dr. Moonie: The number of military trained doctors in the Royal Navy, Army and RAF as at 1 April in each of the last five years are shown in the table:

Year	Royal Navy	Army	RAF
1998	209	431	207
1999	209	437	197
2000	211	452	185
2001	215	459	183
2002	224	473	181

EU Defence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's policy is on the question raised in the note by Mr. M Barnier to members of Convention, CONV 264/02, as to whether an undertaking of collective defence should be enshrined in the Treaty on European Union. [77817]

Mr. Hoon: The Government's policy, and the policy to which the EU collectively committed itself at the European Council of Nice in December 2000, is that NATO remains the basis for the collective defence of its members.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effect of enlargement on military contributions to the EU designated peacemaking and peacekeeping forces. [78117]

Mr. Hoon: All the countries which are candidates for accession to the EU have made offers of contributions, with a view to their participation in EU-led operations. These countries could already offer forces to an EU-led operation, if invited to take part. When a country joins the EU, it simply removes the need for a formal invitation for that country to take part in EU-led operations.

Procedurally, there is also a change. The offers from member states are recorded in the Helsinki Force Catalogue; those of accession candidates in a supplement to the catalogue. This catalogue identifies the pool of capabilities, meeting commonly-agreed requirements, from which forces can be rapidly assembled on a case-by-case basis for particular operations, with the approval of the relevant national governments.

European Security and Defence Policy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the definitions of (a) European Security and Defence Policy and (b) European Security and Defence Identity. [77813]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 4 March 2002, Official Report, column 31W.

Gibraltar

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the restrictions imposed by the Spanish Government on the movements of NATO military aircraft and warships in the vicinity of Gibraltar and in transit between Spain and Gibraltar; and what steps have recently been taken by the UK Government to have these restrictions lifted. [77379]

Mr. Ingram: NATO Standardised Agreement (STANAG) 1100, sets out the procedures for visits to NATO and non-NATO ports by naval ships of NATO nations. This Agreement contains a reservation, inserted by the Spanish Government, which prevents visits by NATO ships to or from Gibraltar directly to or from Spanish ports. Any request by military aircraft from NATO (or other) nations, which has Gibraltar as a departure or arrival airfield, to overfly or land in Spain is routinely denied by Spanish authorities. We understand that NATO has no plans specifically to discuss the restrictions imposed by Spain on NATO ships and aircraft. Discussions between the British and Spanish Government in the context of the Brussels Process aim to resolve all outstanding issues between the United Kingdom and Spain over Gibraltar.

Health Care Professionals

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) nurses, (b) GPs, (c) medical consultants and (d) other health care professionals working for the NHS are subject to military call-up as reservists in the event of military action. [74650]

Dr. Moonie: Although the Ministry of Defence encourages reservists to declare their reserve status to civilian employers, there is no legal requirement to do so unless specified in individual contracts of employment. Reservists are not usually required to provide details of any civilian employment to the Ministry of Defence, until such time as they are called-out. Therefore, no records are available for the number of nurses, GPs, medical consultants and other healthcare professionals that are working in the NHS who are subject to military call-out as reservists.

However, it is possible to provide the number of volunteer reserve nurses, GPs, consultants and other healthcare professionals in the Defence Medical Services (DMS) as at September 2002, and this is outlined in the following table:

Volunteer reserves in the DMS	Number
Nurses	1,278
GPs	96
Consultants	103
Other healthcare professionals	2,065

In addition, ex-Regular personnel with a reserve or recall liability can be subject to military call-out.

Joint Maritime Course

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason HMS Marlborough and HMS Northumberland have been withdrawn from the Joint Maritime Course off Scotland. [78658]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Marlborough and HMS Northumberland have not been withdrawn from the Joint Maritime Course. HMS Marlborough is currently taking part in this training. HMS Northumberland was not scheduled to take part in the Course. She is undertaking safety training prior to her planned period of Operational Sea Training which begins in early November.

Medical Reservists

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the call-up of medical reservists; and if he will make a statement. [78320]

Dr. Moonie: It is vital that service personnel deployed on military operations receive the appropriate level of medical support. The use of reservists for operations is fully in line with the tenets of the Strategic Defence Review, namely having more capable, usable, integrated and relevant reserve forces that support their regular counterparts on operations overseas. The need to call-out reservists is kept under review as part of contingency planning. If reservists are called out, we would select the most suitably qualified individuals for mobilisation by taking into account their relevant skills, fitness and training, and their professional and domestic circumstances. The Ministry of Defence would work closely with the NHS Trusts concerned to minimise disruption as far as possible.

Medical Specialists

Mr Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many medical specialists, and in which specialisations, the Department requires in order to meet operational requirements. [78318]

Dr. Moonie: The Operational and Retained Task requirement for medical specialists and the number of consultants we have in those categories, and in which specialisations, as at 1 July 2002, are set as follows:

	Operational and retained task requirement	Current manning (including command and staff appointments)	Deficit

Military Crisis Management

Mr Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been concluded that will allow the non-EU European NATO members and other countries which are candidates for accession to the EU to contribute to EU military crisis management. [77814]

Mr. Hoon: The EU is committed to the fullest possible involvement of the non-EU European Allies and the EU accession partners in the European Security and Defence Policy (ESDP). A supplement to the Helsinki Force Catalogue has been drawn up, detailing offers of contributions made by these states with a view to their participation in EU-led operations. The Nice European Council agreed at substantial set of provisions governing consultation with these countries and arrangements for their participation in EU-led operations. As a result, they now attend regular ESDP meetings at a number of levels. In the event of a crisis, this dialogue and consultation will be intensified. In particular, it was confirmed at Nice that "upon a decision by the Council to launch an operation, the non-EU European NATO members will participate if they so wish in the event of an operation requiring recourse to NATO assets and capabilities. They will, on a decision by the Council, be invited to take part in operations where the EU does not use NATO assets. Other countries who are candidates for accession to the EU may also be invited by the Council to take part in EU-led operations once the Council has decided to launch such an operation". More detailed modalities concerning non-EU European NATO members were agreed at the European Council in Brussels last weekend. Thursday 31 October 2002PQ Ref No 5558M

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all service personnel have direct access to their military medical records; and if he will make a statement. [78277]

Dr. Moonie: Under the Data Protection Act 1998, personnel are able to request access to their service medical records by making a subject access request. For access to primary health care records, the request should be made to the appropriate Royal Navy, Army or Royal Air Force Service Records Office. For access to secondary health care records, the request may be sent to either the appropriate service records office, the hospital they were treated at, or to the Ministry of Defence Central Health Records Library.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action has been taken to ensure that all military medical records will be accurately maintained and secured; and if he will make a statement. [78285]

Dr. Moonie: Every effort is taken to ensure that service personnel medical records are accurately maintained and securely stored. All three services have routine administrative procedures in place to check that the medical records of both regular and reserve personnel are both up to date and accurate.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to amend the Armed Forces pension scheme to allow benefits to be paid to partners of service men and women killed on active service; and if he will make a statement. [78210]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 30 October 2002]: In the light of support for change expressed in response to public consultation and to a series of focus groups across the Armed Forces, consideration is being given to introducing pension benefits for unmarried partners as part of our review of the Armed Forces pension scheme. The Ministry of Defence will be seeking to finalise approvals on the new scheme around the turn of the year. Those who decide to remain in the current pension scheme would not benefit from any change. Under a similar review of current compensation arrangements, consideration is being given to extending benefits for attributable deaths to unmarried partners as part of a new scheme.

Royal Navy Submarine Crews

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) officers and (b) men the Royal Navy requires to crew the submarines in service with an adequate margin of reserve to ensure full continuity of operations; and how many are available. [78314]

Mr. Ingram: As at 1 August 2002, the Royal Navy Submarine Arm required 254 officers and 1,959 ratings to man submarines in service.

On the same date, 834 officers and 3,670 ratings were required to man the Submarine Arm as a whole. The equivalent strength figures were 629 officers and 3,552 ratings. The shortfall is borne by a range of support and training functions ashore and is currently the focus of a range of recruitment and retention initiatives.

Service Personnel (Illness)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are not serving because of illnesses acquired on deployments in (a) Sierra Leone, (b) Saif Sareea, (c) Afghanistan, (d) Kosovo and (e) Macedonia; and if he will make a statement. [78284]

Dr. Moonie: The number of Army personnel discharged as a result of illness following deployment to Sierra Leone and Kosovo, is one and seven respectively. No Army personnel were discharged as a result of illness to the other deployments listed. No personnel were recorded as having been discharged as a result of these deployments from the Royal Navy or the Royal Air Force.

Suez Campaign (Medals)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) terms of reference, (b) membership and (c) date for final report are of the committee chaired by Lord Guthrie to examine the case for a service medal for veterans of the Suez Canal Zone campaign from 1951 to 1954. [78573]

Dr. Moonie: The terms of reference are as I announced in a written response to a Parliamentary Question on 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 1106W, to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Bob Russell). The sub-committee of the HD Committee under the chairmanship of General Lord Guthrie of Craigiebank will report on the case for an exceptional award of a GSM for the Suez Canal Zone without creating a wider precedent or breaching long-standing principles which underpin the making of such awards.

The sub-committee will consist of the chairman plus Field Marshal Sir John Chapple GCB CBE; Air Vice Marshal K D Filbey CBE FIMgt FRAes RAF; Charles de Chassiron CVO Vice-Marshal of the Diplomatic Corps and Head of Protocol Division, Foreign and Commonwealth Office; the military historian Sir Max Hastings and Gay Catto, Ceremonial Officer, Cabinet Office.

The sub-committee is necessarily independent of the Ministry of Defence and as such I have no visibility or authority over their proceedings. I am advised that the sub-committee has yet to take evidence after which it will fully consider the options. When it has reached a conclusion on the matter, it will report to the HD Committee which in turn will publish the results.

The Ceremonial Branch of the Cabinet Office are acting as secretariat to the sub-committee.

Weapon Thefts

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what category of weapons have been (a) lost and (b) stolen from MOD units and establishments in each year since 1972. [76671]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Ministry of Defence records show a total of 354 weapons to have been lost, and 802 weapons stolen, since 1972. 262 weapons have been recovered during this period. Only the Army and Royal Marines records go back as far as 1972. Royal Navy records go back to 1993 and the RAF to 1991. The detailed year-by-year since statistics were provided is set out in the tables.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Affordable Housing

Andrew George: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much was spent on affordable housing in villages in rural England in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78406]

Mr. McNulty: Information in the form requested is not available immediately. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is collated.

Education Facilities

Mr Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidelines he issues to local authorities considering the construction of new educational facilities on (a) green belt and (b) metropolitan open land; and if he will make a statement. [78081]

Mr. McNulty: Guidance on all aspects of development in the green belt, including new educational facilities, is set out in planning policy guidance note (PPG) 2, green belts. Designated metropolitan open land has the same status as green belt, and the planning policies set out in PPG2 will also apply to such land. New educational facilities in the green belt will be subject to the same controls as other development in the green belt and proposals will need to demonstrate that very special circumstances exist, which outweigh the harm caused to the green belt by the development, if they are to be granted planning permission.

Fireworks

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the use of fireworks on (a) the environment and (b) wildlife; and if he will make a statement. [76958]

Alun Michael: I have been asked to reply.

The Government do take the issue of fireworks seriously. On 14 October 2002, Official Report, column 890W, my hon. Friend the Minister for Consumer Affairs announced a package of measures which the Government are introducing to address the problems that fireworks can pose to humans, to the environment and to wildlife.

In terms of air pollution, a burning firework may produce particulate matter, organic compounds (including polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, dioxins and furans), and a variety of metal fumes and aerosols, depending on its contents. The effects of bonfire night celebrations can certainly be detected in local air quality, but is very dependent on local atmospheric conditions at the time, and the most significant source of emissions is likely to be bonfires rather than fireworks.

In relation to wildlife, there is little research evidence on the immediate effects of bonfire night on wildlife. Fires and loud noises can have a disturbing effect on animals of any kind, but bonfire night celebrations are short-lived and relatively localised in nature.

Housing (Enfield)

Mr. Andrew Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the amount of brownfield land in (a) the London Borough of Enfield and (b) Greater London for the construction of new dwellings; how many new dwellings could be constructed; and if he will make a statement. [78091]

Mr. McNulty: From the 2001 National Land Use Database of Previously Developed Land (NLUD-PDL) an estimated 2,500 hectares of brownfield land were potentially suitable for housing in London. On the figures supplied by local authorities and current density assumptions they could provide 149,000 dwellings.

The most recent information for Enfield is from its return for the 1998 survey. This showed 49 hectares of brownfield land potentially suitable for housing. At densities current at the time they could provide about 2,300 dwellings.

In 2001 23 out of the 33 London Boroughs returned information to NLUD-PDL. The information has been grossed up to provide the estimates for London as a whole quoted above.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much was allocated in housing grants in each year since 1997 to the Housing Corporation; and how many houses were built as a result. [77869]

Mr. McNulty: The table shows the amount of grant paid by the Housing Corporation to registered social landlords under the approved development programme (ADP) and local authority social housing grant (LASHG) together with the dwellings completed in each year for these programmes:

Approved development programme

	Gross ADP expenditure £ £ million	Dwellings completed
1997–98	678	35,418
1998–99	602	31,960
1999–2000	635	25,040
2000–01	715	22,354
2001–02	773	22,875

Local authority social housing grant

	LASHG expenditure £ million	Dwellings completed
1997–98	363	10,152
1998–99	335	9,929
1999–00	328	8,678
2000–01	400	8,419
2001–02	410	6,971

Because of the length of time to complete development, no comparison can be made between funding and completions in any one year.

Housing Developments

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures he intends to bring forward to raise the density of new housing developments in London and the South East. [78711]

Mr. Prescott: In my Parliamentary Statement of 18 July on sustainable communities I announced the Government's intentions for tackling the housing shortage in London and the South East. The Statement explained that the Government expects the housing numbers already agreed in regional planning guidance for the South East to be delivered, working within the presumption of making better use of land by improving design, increasing densities and using brownfield sites to the full. In the Statement, I announced I would intervene in planning applications for housing that involve a density of less than 30 dwellings per hectare net. I am publishing today the Town and Country Planning (Residential Density) (London and South East England) Direction 2002 which gives effect to this announcement. From 2 December local planning authorities in London and the South East will have to consult me before giving planning permission for low density housing developments.

Local Authority Lettings

Andrew George: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much his Department has made available to implement a more flexible lettings policy by local authorities; and how much each rural local authority received in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78395]

Mr. McNulty: We are currently funding 27 local authority pilots of choice based lettings. £13 million was allocated in April 2001 towards the pilots which are expected to finish in April 2003. Out of these, four rural authorities are being supported and payments to date are as follows:

	2001–02	2002–03
Payments to all 27 pilots	4,208,532	1,724,377
Harborough	167,371	114,199
Herefordshire	49,283	18,818
Kennet	145,612	32,179
Restormel	82,097	18,845

Mobile Phone Masts

Mr Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether (a) planning permission and (b) public consultation is needed in order for phone companies to erect antennae on buildings; and if he will make a statement. [78033]

Mr. McNulty: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO) (as amended) grants a general planning permission for licensed telecommunications code system operators to install specified telecommunications apparatus without the need to apply for planning permission to the local authority, subject to certain conditions and limitations.

The installation of an antenna on a building, where the antenna does not exceed the height of the building by 4 metres or more, would normally be regarded as permitted development and would not therefore require an application for planning permission or statutory public consultation.

All mobile phone antennas are registered with the radiocommunications agency. Information on the location and ownership of the antennas is available on the Agency's Site Finder database at www.sitefinder.radio.gov.uk The site is updated every three months.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans the Government has to introduce regulations restricting the ability of phone companies to erect base stations close to residential properties, schools and hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [78034]

Mr. McNulty: Mobile phone mast development close to residential properties, schools and hospitals is subject to the normal telecommunications planning arrangements in place throughout England, set out in Part 24 of the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO). Following publication of the Stewart report on mobile phones and health in May 2000, these arrangements were significantly strengthened and include improved requirements for consulting local people about mast proposals. The changes to the GPDO were underpinned by revised guidance, set out in planning policy guidance note 8, telecommunications, published in August 2001.

The Stewart report did not recommend that the erection of mobile phone masts should be restricted in such areas and we have no plans to introduce specific restrictions. However, in respect of masts near schools, PPG8 advises that before an operator submits an application for planning permission or prior approval for a mast near a school or college they should discuss the proposed development with the relevant body of the school or college.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many representations he has received on health issues relating to mobile phone masts; and if he will make a statement. [78035]

Mr. McNulty: Between January and October this year, the former Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister received centrally 166 letters from Members of Parliament and 165 letters from members of the public and local planning authorities about the amenity or health aspects related to mobile phone masts.

Neighbourhood Renewal Unit

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he intends to publish the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit's Annual Review. [78712]

Mrs. Roche: I have today published the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit's annual report, copies have been placed in the libraries of the House.

Parish and Town Councils

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list those parish and town councils which have reported to him that they have had councillors resign rather than sign the new Standards Code. [76993]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Standards Board for England together have been informed of 95 resignations of parish councillors who were unwilling to accept the new Code of Conduct. A list of those parish councils is as follows:

There is no requirement for parish councils to inform us of resignations, for whatever reason. There are over 8,000 parish councils in England.

Parish Councillors

Mr. Burns: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many parish councillors there are in the West Chelmsford parliamentary constituency; and how many have notified his Department that they have resigned from their parish councils as a result of the introduction of a code of conduct for parish councillors. [77152]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held centrally. Nine parish councillors from four parish councils in Essex have told the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister or the Standards Board for England of their intention to resign.

Planning

Mr Cameron: 10. To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he currently expects to implement proposals in the planning green paper about public consultation; and if he will make a statement. [77870]

Mr. McNulty: The Government is developing its plans for implementing the planning reforms including in public consultation, which were set out in the policy paper Sustainable Communities—Delivering through Planning. Some of those plans require primary legislation and we will be seeking to introduce legislation at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Mole: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to streamline the procedure governing planning enforcement appeals. [79203]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend will tomorrow lay before Parliament five statutory instruments to improve the handling of planning enforcement appeals under each of the three main procedures: written representations, hearings and inquiries. These are the Town and Country Planning (Enforcement Notices and Appeals) (England) Regulations 2002; the Town and Country Planning (Enforcement Appeals) (Written Representations Procedure) (England) Regulations 2002; the Town and Country Planning (Enforcement) (Hearings Procedure) (England) Rules 2002; the Town and Country Planning (Enforcement) (Inquiries Procedure) (England) Rules 2002; and the Town and Country Planning (Enforcement) (Determination by Inspectors) (Inquiries Procedure) (England) Rules 2002.

A departmental circular (ODPM 02–2002), "Enforcement Appeals: Procedures", which explains the new procedures, is to be issued to accompany the new statutory instruments. Copies are to be placed in the House Libraries. The changes implement the conclusions of a consultation exercise announced in August 2000.

The new arrangements, due to come into operation on 23 December 2002, implement the Government's commitment to improve the Planning Inspectorate's service to its customers, and to increase the efficiency of the enforcement appeals process by reducing both the cost and time taken. In introducing these changes, the Government recognise that it is vital to maintain a system which ensures that there is fair and open decision-making and that all parties have the opportunity to put their case, resulting in decisions that are legally sound and of the highest possible quality.

We have already set tough targets for the Planning Inspectorate to turn round enforcement appeals more quickly, and they have made a good deal of progress in improving their own performance. However, improving service to the benefit of all concerned is not just the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. All parties to the enforcement appeal process have a responsibility to meet the deadlines set and to co- operate with the inspectorate in agreeing dates offered for hearings and inquiries. The new procedures will put in place a regime of discipline for all parties involved in the process by setting clear timetables and deadlines for the various stages. In future, representations sent after due dates will normally be disregarded. We intend to monitor the impact of the changes, and will review their effectiveness to help us decide whether any further action is needed.

Post Offices

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to protect post offices in areas of urban deprivation. [76424]

Mrs. Roche: The Government announced their commitment to set up "a £15 million fund to sustain and improve post offices and associated retail facilities in deprived urban areas" in the 'Urban White Paper', which was published in November 2000.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is seeking to launch the scheme in the autumn of 2002, with receipt of first applications early in 2003.

The proposed scheme will seek to contribute to the regeneration and renewal of urban deprived areas through sustaining and improving sub-post offices. Where sub-post offices face risk of closure, it is expected to support:

improvements relating to core post office services; improvements relating to the development of non-post office facilities; and improvements to a sub-postmaster's working conditions, particularly to deter violent and other crime.

Public Sector Contracts

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) when he plans to publish the code of practice covering the recruitment of new staff on public sector contracts; [77955]

(2) what progress he has made towards ending the two-tier workforce in local authority services; and if he will make a statement. [77990]

Mr. Leslie: The Government recently consulted on a code of practice and new statutory guidance which will ensure that all local authority service contracting takes proper account of the need for a high quality workforce in order to deliver high quality services. The consultation period ended on 6 September; we are currently considering the responses, with the aim of publishing the code and guidance shortly.

Public Spaces

Brian White: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will publish his report on public spaces; and when he will respond to the report of the Urban Green Spaces Taskforce. [78710]

Mr. Prescott: I am today publishing "Living Places—Cleaner, Safer, Greener", the Government's report on public space at the Urban Summit. The report draws upon the work of six government departments. The report also includes the Government's response to the report of the Urban Green Spaces Taskforce. Copies of the report have been placed in the library of the House.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will introduce financial incentives and penalties to encourage achievement of regional targets for renewable energy; and if he will make a statement. [78143]

Mr. McNulty: These targets are regionally owned. Advice on achieving them in the context of land use planning will be included in the proposed Planning Policy Statement 22 (renewable energy), on which we will consult fully. We are examining more generally the role of local and regional bodies in delivering energy policy objectives as part of the on-going work for the Energy White Paper, which is due to be published in the new year.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, (1) how the costs on the District Auditor's Office inquiry into the sale of dwellings by Westminster Council will be distributed; how much other local authorities will be charged to cover the costs; and if he will make a statement. [76860]

(2) what he estimates the cost of the inquiry into housing sales by Westminster City Council will be to the Office of the District Auditor; and if he will make a statement. [76861]

Mr. McNulty: The auditor's investigation leading to his decision in 1996 that six individuals had caused a loss, through wilful misconduct, of some 31million to Westminster City Council, and to issue surcharge certificates against those individuals, cost approximately 3 million. Those costs were met by Westminster City Council.

The auditor's costs in the subsequent litigation (during which the Divisional Court set aside the auditor's surcharge in respect of four of the six individuals) leading to the decision of the House of Lords in December 2001, to uphold the surcharge against Dame Shirley Porter and David Weeks, were met by the Audit Commission. The total of the auditor's litigation costs to this point was around 4.5million. Westminster City Council is currently taking legal action to recover the amount of the surcharge and costs. The final costs of the investigation and litigation will not be known until the outcome of those proceedings.

Starter Home Initiative

Tim Loughton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much each local authority will receive from the £200 million Challenge Fund as part of the Starter Home Initiative. [78198]

Mr. McNulty: The Challenge Fund (which is not part of the Starter Home Initiative) has been set up within the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme in 2003–04 to provide 4,000 homes for rent and low cost home ownership in south-east England. Bids for the Challenge Fund were invited from registered social landlords by 18 October. Dependent upon the bids received, a proportion of the homes will be for key public sector workers. We hope to announce the outcome of the bidding process in November.

Public Relations

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list external (a) public relations/communications companies, (b) advertising and marketing companies, (c) management consultancies, (d) accountancy companies, (e) banking firms, (f) individual consultants and (g) other specialist consultancies used by his Department since June 2001; what actions those consultancies/companies have performed within his Department; and what costs have been incurred through use of these consultancies/companies. [74689]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Warley to the hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden on 28 October, Official Report, column 735–36W.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

National Tests (Cheating)

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he has taken to gather evidence about cheating in national tests for 11-year-olds; and if he will make a statement. [78376]

Mr. Miliband: The QCA reports to the Department each year on the incidence of malpractice and maladministration in national tests. Both the Department and QCA take all complaints about malpractice very seriously. QCA works closely with LEAs to investigate and monitor reported incidents. Even anonymous complaints are recorded and monitored. QCA works very closely with LEA inspectors who conduct thorough checks throughout the test process. Investigations of malpractice can involve a review of scripts from a school, interviews with teachers, talking to children and drawing on advice from experts in the field depending upon the nature of the allegations.

In 2002, 479 cases of alleged malpractice or maladministration across the three key stages were reported, leading to the annulment of the results of seven schools. Of these seven schools, four had the results in one subject annulled, two the results in two subjects and one the results in all three subjects.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent guidance his Department has given the QCA on preventing cheating in national tests for 11-year-olds. [78380]

Mr. Miliband: The Department's remit to the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority includes the maintenance of a robust, reliable and credible examination and assessment system. As part of its role in overseeing the administration of statutory assessments, it is for the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to approach the Department with proposals for minimising the incidence of malpractice and maladministration in the national tests.

The QCA will continue to keep its processes under review and to advise the Department accordingly.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will set up an inquiry into the levels of cheating in national tests for 11-year-olds. [78377]

Mr. Miliband: No. The QCA continues to keep its processes for detecting and investigating malpractice under review.

QCA works closely with LEAs to investigate and monitor reported incidents. Anonymous complaints are recorded and monitored. QCA works very closely with LEA inspectors who conduct thorough checks throughout the test process. Investigations of malpractice can involve a review of scripts from a school, interviews with teachers, talking to children and drawing on advice from experts in the field depending upon the nature of the allegations. There has been no evidence presented to Government of widespread malpractice in the administration of the Key Stage 2 tests this year.

Child Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the role of her Department in improving access to child care for working parents. [76459]

Maria Eagle: A new unit, led by Baroness Ashton, accountable for delivery to the Department for Education and Skills and the Department for Work and Pensions, will administer a budget of £1.5 billion a year by 2005–06. This represents a doubling of child care spending in real terms .

By March 2004, new child care places for 1.6 million children will be created. New places for a further 450,000 children will be created by 2006. There are specific initiatives—like the establishment of children's centres and neighbourhood nurseries— which will provide more good quality, safe child care in disadvantaged areas.

Substantial help with child care costs is provided to lower income families through the child care tax credit element of the working families tax credit. This assistance will continue in an improved and more flexible form as part of the working tax credit from April 2003.

GCSE Pass Marks

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what is the average mark required to pass GCSE (a) maths, (b) English and (c) history for each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [75259]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The GCSE is not a pass/fail examination. The GCSE grading system is criteria-related and grade boundary ranges for each subject are established each year by awarding bodies, making reference to candidates' work from the previous year, grade descriptions, past papers and statistical data. Each boundary is set by individual awarding bodies using both professional judgment and key statistical evidence. Information on grade boundary marks is not routinely collected.

The information on grade boundaries in maths, English and history will be lodged in the House of Commons Library in due course.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the average mark needed to attain a grade (a) A, (b) C and (c) G in GCSE mathematics was in each year from 1987 to 2002; [75263]

(2) what the average mark needed to achieve an (a) A grade and (b) A* grade in GCSE mathematics was in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [76548]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Information is not routinely collected on grade boundary marks in GCSE mathematics, across individual awarding body specifications. Grade boundary ranges for each subject, including mathematics, are established making reference to candidates' work from the previous year, grade descriptions, past papers and statistical data. Each boundary is set by individual awarding bodies using both professional judgement and key statistical evidence.

The information on grade boundaries in Maths GCSE for the period requested will be lodged in the House of Commons Library in due course.

National Grid for Learning

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much government funding is available to connect schools to the National Grid for Learning; and how much was spent on rural schools in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78398]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Government are committed to investing £1.8 billion on ICT in schools in England over 1998–2004; this covers equipment, content and training as well as connecting schools to the National Grid for Learning through the internet. Allocations to schools in 2000–01 and 2001–02 were £205 million and £245 million, respectively. A further £355 million is being allocated in 2002–03. This funding is not disaggregated for connections to the internet or for the amount allocated to rural schools. However, latest survey data published on 30 October indicate that average school expenditure on ICT has risen from £18,100 in 2000–01 to £24,800 in 2001–02.

PE Teaching (Primary Schools)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of PE teaching in primary schools. [73936]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted) is responsible for monitoring, reporting and advising the Secretary of State on the quality of teaching and learning in schools, including Physical Education (PE).Ofsted published—in February 2002—a primary subject report on PE for the academic year 2000–01. This reported that in one in four primary schools there had been a significant improvement in the quality of PE since their previous inspections. Ofsted also reported that teaching was good or better in about half of schools; this maintains recent trends. The report has been placed in both libraries.

School Exclusions (West Kent)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children have been excluded from (a) state primary and (b) state secondary schools in West Kent at each of the key stages, in each year since 1997. [77503]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table. Information collected centrally on permanent exclusions does not record the key stage of the pupil; a breakdown of the figures by age is given as a proxy. Figures are not available centrally on fixed-term exclusions.

Schools (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils have been excluded from state (a) primary and (b) secondary schools at each of the key stages in each year since 1997 in Somerset. [77764]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table. Information collected centrally on permanent exclusions does not record the key stage of the pupil; a breakdown of the figures by age is given as a proxy. Figures are not available centrally on fixed-term exclusions.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Fisheries Council

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the outcome was of the Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 14 and 15 October; what the Government's stance was on each issue discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement. [76019]

Margaret Beckett: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 14–15 October. The Scottish Minister for Environment and Rural Development also attended.

The Council considered three proposals on food safety, covering the monitoring and control of zoonoses and genetically modified food and feed. Some clarification of positions emerged but it was not possible to reach agreement on this occasion. Further work will be undertaken by officials before Ministers reconsider these dossiers.

The Council assessed the agricultural priorities flowing from the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg and agreed conclusions accordingly.

The Council continued its consideration of the mid-term review of the CAP with a discussion concentrating on the proposals concerning rural development, farm audits and three commodity sectors: nuts, rice and milk. My hon. Friend was supported by a number of other Member States in stressing the importance of a shift from production-linked support under the CAP to rural development programmes and he recalled the importance of a fair distribution of funds between Member States. On the commodity proposals, he opposed the introduction of new market measures for nuts and supported the Commission's proposals on rice which would complement improved access to the EU market for third countries. On milk, he reiterated UK support for action that would eventually enable milk quotas to be phased out, and indicated that we would be prepared to consider favourably the possible acceleration of certain measures agreed in the Agenda 2000 package.

Ministers also discussed the agricultural aspects of the WTO round negotiations. My hon Friend strongly supported Commissioner Fischler in emphasising the importance of CAP reform in general and decoupling in particular if the EU is to participate constructively in the round.

Under other business, the Commission dealt with enquiries about olive oil promotion, aid to Greek cotton producers and negotiations with third countries over grain imports.

On fisheries, the Council held a further debate on the Commission's proposals for reform of the Common Fisheries Policy, this time covering access to waters and resources, enforcement, and the Commission's proposals for Regional Advisory Councils: the presidency noted the various views expressed and reiterated that its aim is to conclude this dossier at the December Agriculture and Fisheries Council.

The Council also debated the Commission's proposal for a cod and hake recovery plan based on limitations on days at sea, which was originally submitted to the Council in December 2001. There was a divergence of view on the desirability of a plan, with one significant group of member states, including the UK, supportive of the need to act, and another group markedly less so. For the UK, my hon. Friend recognised the seriousness of the state of the stocks and emphasised that all possible approaches, including days at sea, warranted consideration. He stressed also that it would be important, when determining what measures to adopt, to recognise the varying structures and circumstances of national fleets.

Commissioner Fischler gave a first presentation to the Council on his proposed action plan for Mediterranean fisheries. The Council will discuss this substantively at a later date.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much was spent on areas of outstanding natural beauty in each region in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78391]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency, which manages the expenditure on Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, has provided the following figures:

Region	2001–02	2002–03
North East	407,692	133,748	(545,000)
North West	216,126	108,001	(310,000)
Yorkshire and Humberside	80,358	13,677	(189,000)
East Midlands	69,400	(10,570)	(75,000)
West Midlands	492,998	109,916	(449,000)
East of England	369,966	78,227	(308,000)
South East and London	1,227,573	406,730	(1,555,000)
South West	923,526	362,617	(1,805,000)
Nationally	1,108,429	412,077	(970,000)
Total:	4,896,069	[1] 1,635,563	(6,206,000)

[1] Actual spend to date for 02/03 as at 29 October 2002 is given along with, in brackets, the expected total spend based on current commitments.

The Agency advises that figures for 2000/01 are not available in this format because the programme for areas of outstanding natural beauty that year was part of a wider theme on protected landscapes, taking in national parks, Heritage coasts and Heritage landscapes. The total spend on the theme was £4.4m.

TB

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what actions her Department and the Bourne Group have undertaken to investigate the incidence of bovine TB in those areas which have been restocked with cattle since the culling and movement restriction policy following the foot and mouth outbreak last year. [77388]

Mr. Morley: Defra has commissioned an extensive research project with Warwick University to study the transmission of bovine TB in restocked herds. The first part of this project investigates the incidence of bovine TB in herds in the badger culling trial areas which have been restocked since the foot and mouth disease (FMD) outbreak, compared with herds in the same areas which were unaffected by FMD. The second part of the project is a case control study of restocked herds in all parts of Great Britain which become infected with bovine TB within two years of restocking.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the timetable is for the implementation of the amended TB Order. [77391]

Mr. Morley: The original public consultation on the amended TB Order was interrupted by the foot and mouth disease outbreak. Additional policy considerations have come to light since the initial exercise was carried out and a further consultation on the amended TB Order is planned for the first half of next year. A timetable for implementation of the Order will be drawn up following consultation.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on the European Commission's proposals on the mid-term review of the common agricultural policy. [75960]

Mr. Morley: I welcome the European Commission's proposals for reform of the CAP which are a good basis for discussion. The Government supports the proposed shift in support from production-linked payments to wider agri-environment and rural development measures as well as the proposal to remove the link between production and support. In a number of key areas we would have liked the proposals to go further, notably by offering real budgetary savings and firm proposals for reform of the dairy regime. We will need to ensure that the reforms offer a fair deal for UK producers.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress she expects on reform of the Common Agricultural Policy as a result of the mid-term review; and if she will make a statement. [75248]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 October 2002]: Formal legislative proposals for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy are not expected until December at the earliest. Negotiations will therefore continue into 2003. It is too early to say what the outcome of discussions will be, but the UK will continue to argue that reform is essential if we are to meet our domestic objectives and international obligations.

Community Development Work

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much of the fund for community development work was spent in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78404]

Alun Michael: The proposal to support community development workers was announced in the rural White Paper in November 2000. I understand from the Countryside Agency that bids from rural community councils to employ additional community development workers to work with small rural communities to tackle the problem of social exclusion were invited in October 2001 for the three year period from April 2002. 37 posts have been approved. In addition, the Community Development Foundation has been contracted to develop a network of rural community development workers, including the posts funded through the Agency, to build capacity among the network, to spread good practice and to promote training. Total spend in the year to date is £385,691. There was no expenditure in 2000/01 and 2001/02.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) recent discussions she has had and (b) representations she has received regarding the Countryside Agency; and if she will make a statement. [78614]

Alun Michael: I have regular meetings with the Chairman and Chief Executive of the Countryside Agency and we exchange correspondence frequently. Most recently I met the board of the agency on 16 October where we discussed how best we could work together to deliver the Government's objectives of securing prosperous rural economies, vibrant rural communities and a countryside which all may enjoy.

Officials in the Department also work closely with officials in the Agency to ensure the efficient and effective delivery of rural policy.

Departmental Logo

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much it cost to redesign the Department's logo; and which outside bodies were involved in the creative process. [78200]

Alun Michael: Our current expenditure on redesigning the Defra Logo is £24,000, with a further £8,000 of expenditure on research and refinement.

The outside body involved in the creative process was the brand design agency, Bamber Forsyth-Fitch.

Environmental Action Fund Grant

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much funding is available through the Environmental Action Fund Grant; and how much was spent through it in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78392]

Alun Michael: In each of the financial years 2000–01, 2001–02 and 2002–03, £4.2 million has been available through the Environmental Action Fund. Out-turn was also £4.2 million in both 2000–01 and 2001–02. For 2002–03 we have allocated the full resource of the Fund to deserving biodiversity and sustainable development education and awareness raising projects.

Farm Support

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been spent and how many farmers have been supported, by category, through the (a) England Rural Development Programme and (b) Farm Business Advisory Service in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03 to date. [78386]

It is not possible separately to identify figures for farmers and for non-farmer recipients, or to break down the figures by type of farm other than at disproportionate cost.

It is not possible to identify the numbers of farmers by type of farm in either scheme without incurring disproportionate costs.

Firefighters' Strike

Mr Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what preparations she has made to ensure the safety and continuity of service to the public in the event of a firefighters' strike; and what the cost is to the Department of these actions. [77665]

Alun Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Raynesford) on 28 October 2002, Official Report, column 527W. The cost of providing emergency cover will depend on the extent and nature of any industrial action.

Growth Promoters

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessments she has made of the appropriateness of using growth promoters in livestock and poultry. [77624]

Mr. Morley: The Government take very seriously the possibility of the development of antimicrobial resistance in bacteria affecting humans as a result of the use of antibiotics in animals. They are satisfied that the four remaining antibiotic growth promoters are not related to any therapeutic antibiotics currently used in human or veterinary medicine but will keep the issue under review. Government policy will continue to be informed by the advice of their specialist committees.

There is currently a proposal before the European Commission for a regulation on additives for use in animal nutrition. The proposal aims to rationalise existing measures and introduce new controls. One of the effects will be to withdraw the use of antibiotic growth promoters by 31 December 2005. The intended withdrawal is based on a precautionary approach taking into account the impact that antimicrobial-resistant microbes can have on human health. This time scale includes a phasing out period, allowing time for the development of new husbandry methods and for industry to develop alternative products.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Household Waste (Chelmsford)

Mr Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the proportion of household waste that was recycled in the Chelmsford local authority area in (a) the last year for which figures are available, (b) 1998 and (c) 1995. [77153]

Mr. Meacher: Figures derived from the Defra annual Municipal Waste Management Survey show a household recycling rate for Chelmsford borough council, of 7 per cent in 2000–01 and 3 per cent in 1998–99. Data is not available for 1995. Copies of the results from the municipal waste management survey 2000–01 and earlier years, are available in the House of Commons Library and from the DEFRA website: httD.V/www.defra.aov.uk/environment/wastats/mwbOOOI/index.htm

LEADER + Programme

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been (a) applied for and (b) spent through the LEADER + Programme by area in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78401]

Alun Michael: LEADER + is an EU programme which is part funded by the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund. Funding is allocated by calendar year. English LEADER + local action groups have been allocated the following funding for their development plans, grouped by region:

Region	2002		2003
	EU (£)	DEFRA (£)	EU (£)	DEFRA (£)
North West	596,479	258,579	1,007,033	480,777
North East	273,912	78,579	551,815	126,802
Yorkshire and the Humber	304,481	142,820	648,359	316,965
West Midlands	129,311	66,004	191,694	91,059
East Midlands	214,948	102,975	623,928	272,488

South East	499,020	125,345	1,396,003	427,227
Total	2,942	1,138,298	6,008,346	2,373,578

We do not yet have any figures on expenditure by local action groups as they are currently putting together their first grant claims. These will cover the period 7 January 2002 (when the successful local action groups were announced) to 31 September 2002.

Management and Best Practice Toolkit

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many applications were made and how much was spent through the internet-linked management and best practice toolkit in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date; broken down by project. [78394]

Alun Michael: Following a commitment in the Rural White Paper the web based best practice toolkit for parishes was launched in September 2002. It was developed by the Countryside Agency working with the Local Government Association (LGA), the National Association of Local Councils (NALC) and the improvement and Development Agency (IDeA). The 'Knowledge' website is a free web resource. The address is www.idea-knowledge.gov.uk and is currently used by over 15,000 registered users.

The editorial management is jointly owned by the IDeA, LGA, NALC and the Countryside Agency. The Countryside Agency chairs and services the editorial management meetings. The toolkit focuses particularly on partnership working between parish and town councils and principal local authorities.

The toolkit is a resource not a mechanism for application for grants. Therefore figures cannot be provided in the format requested.

Market Town Regeneration

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been (a) applied for and (b) spent on market town regeneration by her Department in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03 to date. [78400]

Alun Michael: The Market Town Initiative is being taken forward on Defra's behalf by the regional development agencies, working with the Countryside Agency and local partners, and using the £37 million of Government funding announced in the rural White Paper in November 2000 plus such match funding as can be secured from other public and private sources.

Expenditure on the Initiative in 2001–02 is estimated at some £2.9m by the regional development agencies and some £2.5m by the countryside agency. Information for the current financial year is not yet available but as most towns have now completed their action plans this should result in a substantial increase in project expenditure by RDAs and other partners.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, if she will ensure that her officials avoid causing the bankruptcy of Mr. L. A. and Mrs. S. M. Rogers of South Milton, Kingsbridge by continuing to demand a penalty for their failure to despatch the appropriate forms to the British Cattle Movement Service in Cumbria in 2001. [77530]

Alun Michael: I can assure the hon. Member that following a thorough review of the case his constituents will receive their 2001 Beef Special Premium Scheme payment shortly.

National Parks

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much was spent on national park grants in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78390]

Alun Michael: In 2000–01 and 2001–02 the English National Park Authorities and the Broads Authority received £26,166,650 and £27,920,833 respectively.

In 2002–03 the National Parks and Broads Authority will receive £31,493,854[1]. Of this, £25,345,978 has been spent to date.

[1] This includes funding to aid recovery from Foot and Mouth and for implementation of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act. Core funding for 2002–03 is £29,618,853.

Pigswill

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what representations she has received, and what studies have been conducted, into the environmental impact of pigswill being disposed of to landfill; and what assessment her Department has made of the risk of an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease or swine fever as a result; [76303]

(2) how many representations she has received concerning pig farmers affected by the ban on the use of pigswill. [76311]

Mr. Morley: In March 2001 during the foot and mouth outbreak, the proposal to ban swill feeding was the subject of a full public consultation and Regulatory Impact Assessment. We received over 350 responses to the consultation letter. Subsequently, Minister's have received 51 letters and 33 questions from MPs with regards to the ban on swill feeding. On 20 November 2001 I met with representatives of the Associated Swill Users.

Before the ban on swill-feeding, only a small proportion of catering waste from restaurants and other catering establishments was fed to pigs as swill. The vast majority was already disposed of to landfill or incineration. As the additional waste was going to landfill under the same conditions as before, no specific assessment was made as to the environmental and animal health impacts from the use of landfill to dispose of material that would otherwise have been fed to pigs.

Poultry Cages

Mr. Owen Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether it is the Government's policy to take decisions concerning the future of enriched cages at EU level. [77360]

Mr. Morley: Council Directive 99/74/EC laying down minimum standards for the welfare of laying hens has been implemented through the Welfare of Farmed Animals (England) Regulations 2000, as amended, which came into force on 25 June. Consistent with the Government's Strategy for Agriculture, the directive has been implemented without adding to it in any way.

However, we have carried out a three-month public consultation on the future of enriched cages. Responses to this consultation will form part of our consideration on whether "enriched" cages should continue to be permitted. That consideration will be guided by the available scientific evidence and the need to provide egg producers with the certainty they need to enable them to make long-term investment decisions.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the potential change in employment in England as a result of a ban on the enriched laying cage. [77361]

Mr. Morley: A partial regulatory impact assessment was included in the public consultation and will be considered again and revisited in the light of responses received.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will publish the results of her Department's detailed assessment of the competition implications of the proposed ban on enriched laying cages; [77362]

(2) when she intends to make a decision on the future of enriched laying cages. [77363]

Mr. Morley: A partial regulatory impact assessment was included in the public consultation about a possible ban on enriched cages. The impact assessment will be looked at again in light of the responses received. A full regulatory impact assessment will be made available along with the results of the consultation.

Public Spaces

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will publish the consultation paper on reforming the legislative framework for providing and maintaining public spaces. [78621]

Alun Michael: I am today publishing "Living Places—Powers, Rights, Responsibilities", the Government's consultation paper on options for reforming the way statutory powers, duties and guidance help the relevant service providers to improve our public spaces and the local environment. The paper is being presented at the urban summit to accompany a report on public spaces being published by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. The consultation paper concerns several Government departments and I look forward to feedback from a broad range of groups. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Rural Payments Agency

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will publish the 2001–02 annual report of the rural payments agency. [79117]

Alun Michael: The 2001–02 annual report and accounts for the rural payments agency were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Street Cleaning

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what sums she makes available to provide for street cleaners; and what measures she can take if a local authority fails to keep its area clean for the public. [77008]

Alun Michael: A number of large mainstream budgets directly affect the safety and cleanliness of local neighbourhoods. Additional investment in real terms for these areas was announced in Spending Review 2002 covering the years 2003–06. General revenue grant to local authorities is up by an average of 3.9 per cent a year after inflation. The Government's general revenue provision for most aspects of public space, including provision for street cleaners, is allocated via the Environment, Protective and Cultural Services grant block, which is up 1.3 per cent. after inflation.A litter abatement order may be applied for if a local authority does not carry out its statutory duty to keep its land free of litter and debris, so far is practicable. This is done through the Magistrates' Court. If successful in obtaining the order it means that the offending authority must clean the area.

Voluntary Sector

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much funding is available for the voluntary sector in terms of (a) grants and (b) core-funding by her Department; and how much of that money has been (i) applied for and (ii) spent in (A) 2000–01, (B) 2001–02 and (C) 2002–03 to date. [78389]

Alun Michael: Because of departmental changes in June 2001, the information is not readily available in the form requested. Information is being collated and I will write to the hon. Member within the next week.

Wildlife-friendly Agriculture

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to direct grant monies towards wildlife-friendly agriculture; and if she will make a statement. [77044]

Mr. Morley: The Government are committed to improving standards of environmental protection in agriculture, and are pressing for a shift in Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) expenditure from production-linked payments towards rural development and agri-environment measures.

In 2001, the Government introduced modulation, re-directing a proportion of CAP payments into schemes such as the Countryside Stewardship Scheme and Environmentally Sensitive Areas, both of which aim to safeguard and enhance wildlife habitats.

These schemes form part of the England Rural Development Programme, under which £1.6 billion will be invested in the countryside between 2000 and 2006, including £1 billion on agri-environment measures. The Government have committed an additional £75 million to introduce a new entry-level agri-environment scheme in 2005, following successful pilots. This scheme will be available to as many farms as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what the latest estimate is of how much of Afghanistan's poppy fields have been destroyed; and what the UK is doing to help the Afghanistan Government combat the production of opium; [77929]

(2) what action the UK is taking to help the Afghanistan Government combat the production of opium; [78450]

(3) what his latest estimate is of how much of Afghanistan's poppy fields have been destroyed in the last 12 months. [78449]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Afghan Government estimate their eradication programme destroyed approximately 17,300 hectares of the 2002 opium poppy crop. The United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention estimates that the size of the 2002 crop was 74,000 hectares.

The UK is co-ordinating international anti-narcotics assistance to Afghanistan. In consultation with the Afghan Government, other donors and international (especially UN) agencies, the UK has developed a strategy for the long term elimination of drugs from Afghanistan. It identifies four key areas where the international community should focus its support: providing alternative livelihoods for opium poppy farmers; improving Afghan drug law enforcement capacity; building up the capacity of Afghan drug control institutions; and reducing drug demand in Afghanistan.

Bilateral Aid

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assistance the Government has given to each EU applicant country in terms of bilateral aid. [78872]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given him by my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Europe on 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 636W. The UK pays 19.6 per cent. of EU pre-accession assistance.Bilateral assistance is ongoing and comes from a number of areas. DFID provides significant assistance through its bilateral programme. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office provides assistance to applicant countries through its bilateral action plans, command programme budget allowances and through functional departments (e.g global conflict prevention fund).

British High Commission (Singapore)

Mr Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department was informed that the Government of Singapore had made a statement on responsibility for the attempted attack on the British High Commission in that country in December 2001; what assessment his Department made of that statement; what consequent threat assessment his Department has made; what action was taken and on what date; and if he will make a statement. [78326]

Mr. Straw: The Government of Singapore informed us in mid-December 2001 of a possible threat to our High Commission in Singapore. The High Commission raised its level of security. The Government of Singapore subsequently announced on 6 January 2002 the detention of thirteen people during December 2001 in connection with plans to mount terrorist attacks against a range of targets in that country.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said on 15 October 2002, Official Report, column 178, prior to 11 September 2001, and especially afterwards, we identified South East Asia as an area with a real and present threat from groups linked to al-Qaeda. The FCO's travel advice to the region takes account of this threat.

On 28 October 2002 my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary laid before this House the Statutory Instrument for the proscription of Jemaah Islamiyah in the UK. This issue was debated by both Houses of Parliament on 30 October 2002 and the Order will now come into force on 1 November 2002.

Child Abduction

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans he has to raise the case of Catherine Meyer in an international forum; [75652]

(2) what plans he has to raise child abduction issues in an EU forum. [75651]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 28 October 2002, Official Report, column 554.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being taken to reconcile the CAP with the coming enlargement of the EU. [77033]

Mr. MacShane: At the Brussels European Council on 24 October 2002, the EU agreed to phase in direct payments for the new member states over nine years (2004–2013). To help limit the cost of extending CAP to the new member states, the EU also agreed to put a ceiling on traditional CAP expenditure between 2007 and 2013 based on its 2006 levels. This is without prejudice to possible CAP reform in the context of the mid term review and the Doha development round, which the Government strongly advocates.

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts concerning the Common Agricultural Policy. [77944]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has discussed the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) with EU colleagues on a number of occasions over the last few weeks. As the Prime Minister made clear to the House on 28 October, the Government remain firmly committed to a thorough reform of the CAP, consistent with the commitments that we and our EU partners made at the Doha WTO Ministerial and WSSD in Johannesburg. The conclusions of the Brussels European Council recall those commitments made at Doha.

Convention on the Future of Europe

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the mandate of the Convention on the Future of Europe Working Group on Defence is; and if he will make a statement. [77818]

Mr. MacShane: The Government welcome the European Convention's decision to set up a Working Group on Defence. The Working Group's mandate is set out in Convention document CONV 206/02 of 19 July 2002 and reads as follows:

Apart from the Petersberg tasks, what defence remit could be envisaged for the Union?

Since the Union has decided that it must have a genuine operational capability, including a military capability, what can be done to ensure that the Member States have the military capabilities needed to guarantee the credibility of the Union's defence policy? Should we seek inspiration from monetary union, and establish admission criteria and a pact to be complied with thereafter?

Should provision be made for extending enhanced cooperation to defence matters?

What can be done to ensure that decisions can be taken quickly during a crisis management operation?

What can be done to ensure coherent planning of the Union's crisis management operations?

What methods should be used to ensure greater efficiency and economies of scale in arms procurement, research and development? Should the creation of a European Arms Agency be envisaged?

Correspondence

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when UK Visas will reply to the letter of 27 June from the hon. Member for Manchester, Central, regarding Mr. AM reference NBI/1003564/7/8. [77533]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 30 October 2002]: I am sorry for the delay in replying to my hon. Friend's letter of 27 June. A reply was sent to him on 30 October.

Cyprus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of Cyprus' application to join the EU [77926]

Mr. MacShane: Cyprus has made very good progress in negotiations, having provisionally closed 28 of the 31 negotiating chapters. At Brussels the European Council confirmed its determination to conclude negotiations with Cyprus, along with nine other countries, at its meeting in Copenhagen on 12/13 December. It also reiterated its preference for a reunited Cyprus to join the EU. If there is no settlement, it said, "the decisions to be taken in December by the Copenhagen European Council will be based on the conclusions set out by [..] Helsinki" i.e. that the Council's decision will be taken without a settlement being a precondition and that all relevant factors would be taken into account.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards establishing discussions between the communities in Cyprus on property rights as part of a settlement; and if he will make a statement. [77911]

Mr. MacShane: Property is one of the core issues, identified by the UN Secretary-General, being discussed by the two leaders in Cyprus as part of efforts to find a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement to the Cyprus problem. The UN Secretary-General has asked that the content of discussions during the settlement talks remain private. I urge the two leaders to do all they can to narrow their differences on property and on the other core issues.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with (a) Turkey and (b) Greece, concerning the prospects of a settlement in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement [77912]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met Sukru Sina Gurel, Turkish Foreign Minister, on 24 September and George Papandreou, Greek Foreign Minister on 24 October 2002. He discussed settlement negotiations in Cyprus with both, made clear that our aim is for a reunited island to be invited at the Copenhagen European Council to accede to the European Union and urged both to take an active role in supporting the UN on Cyprus.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bicommunal events and activities his Department and the British Council have supported in Cyprus in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.[R] [77913]

Mr. MacShane: The Government are committed to developing practical co-operation between the two communities on and off the island. The then Minister for Europe my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Peter Hain) hosted a reception and gave a speech to an intercommunal gathering on 10 April which was attended by senior politicians from both communities. The British high commission has made a significant contribution to intercommunal dialogue, bringing Turkish and Greek Cypriots together at a wide range of events.

Mr Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made by the technical committees established under UN auspices to look at aspects of the Cyprus problem relating to constitutional and treaty matters; and if he will make a statement [77915]

Mr. MacShane: I welcome the establishment of the technical committees to support the settlement talks on Cyprus, announced by the Secretary-General on 4 October. We hope the committees will start their work as soon as possible. The UN Secretary-General has asked that the content of discussions during the settlement talks remains private to the parties.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Lord Hannay has visited (a) Cyprus, (b) Greece, (c) Turkey and (d) the United Nations in the last 12 months for discussions on the Cyprus problem; and who he met on each occasion. [77916]

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to extend the benefits of EU membership to Cypriot inhabitants of the SBAs, Cyprus; and if he will make a statement [77924]

Mr. MacShane: As the Commission noted in its report on Cyprus of 9 October, as part of the preparation for Cyprus1 future EU membership, the British government has over the past year held meetings with Cyprus and the European Commission to discuss the arrangements that will come into force in the SBAs when Cyprus joins the EU. Our objective has been, as described in the written answer by my noble Friend Baroness Symons of 5 December 2001 (Official Report, column WA 140), to continue with the policy of the SBAs remaining outside the EU, except where necessary to ensure that Cypriots who live and work in the SBAs do not benefit less from Cyprus's membership of the European Union than their compatriots in the Republic of Cyprus. The outcome of these discussions will be considered by the European institutions, including the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on efforts to find a solution to the Cyprus problem [77927]

Mr. MacShane: I am pleased that talks are continuing between the two sides in Cyprus to reach a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement. Our aim, and that of our EU partners and the US, is that such a settlement should be reached as soon as possible, so that a reunited island can be invited, at the Copenhagen European Council, to accede to the EU. I fully support the UN in its efforts to bridge the gaps between the two sides and urge the two leaders to do all they can to narrow their differences on the core issues.

Death Penalty

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those organisations funded by committees' money campaigning to end the death penalty; if such organisations campaign in the United States; and what representations he has received from (a) the US Government (b) individual US states thereon. [78124]

Mr. Rammell: It is unclear to which committee the hon. Member is referring, but it is HMG policy to lobby for a world-wide abolition of the death penalty.

The UK took the lead during its EU presidency in formulating new EU guidelines on the death penalty. We have also established a Death Penalty Panel including expert academics and NGO representatives.

Currently, the FCO is funding the International Justice Project. It is a resource centre in the US that provides information to US defence lawyers tackling death penalty cases.

We shall continue to lobby States in the US until the death penalty is abolished.

Gibraltar

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on negotiations with the Government of Spain over the future sovereignty of Gibraltar. [78443]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made to the House on 12 July 2002, Official Report, columns 1165–67.

North Korea

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government was informed by the United States Government of the latter's knowledge of the most recent status of North Korea's nuclear weapons programme; and what action has been taken by the United Kingdom as a result of this knowledge. [77221]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Like the US, we have been concerned for some time at reports of clandestine North Korean nuclear activities. The North Koreans confirmed that they were pursuing an enrichment programme for nuclear weapons in a meeting with US Assistant Secretary Kelly on 4 October. We learned of that admission shortly afterwards.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said on 17 October (full statement available on the FCO website www.fco.gov.uk) that North Korea's actions are a serious violation of its international obligations. We are assessing our policy towards North Korea in consultation with our friends and allies most directly concerned with security on the Korean Peninsula, and with our partners in the European Union.

Recruitment (Over-50s)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those reports produced to date by the EU Institute for Security Studies, with security caveat grading. [78122]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The publication record of the institute, and its official reports are available on its website (www.iss-eu.org). None of its reports has a security classification.

Resale Rights Directive

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the legal basis of Directive 2001/84/EC on art resale rights; at what point right of veto was waived by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement. [78118]

Mr. MacShane: The legal basis of Directive 2001/84/EC on the resale right for the benefit of an author of an original work of art was Article 95 of the Treaty establishing the European Community. The directive was subject to qualified majority voting. During lengthy negotiations the Government were, however, able to secure significant improvements to the initial proposal put forward by the Commission.

Shener Levent

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Turkish Cypriots concerning (a) the imprisonment of journalist Shener Levent and Lavant of "Afrika" newspaper, (b) the outstanding charges against Shener Levent in the military court, (c) the outstanding charges against Ozker Ozkur and Izzet Izcan, political party leaders, in the military court and (d) the use of military court against opponents of the Denktash regime and if he will make a statement.[R] [77925]

Mr. MacShane: I am disappointed that Shener Levent is again being tried in court for publishing articles critical of the Turkish Cypriot authorities. I condemn all attacks on press freedom, and call upon the Turkish Cypriot authorities to ensure full respect for the right to freedom of expression of Shener Levent and all Turkish Cypriots. I made a statement on 4 September and the British Government made official representations when Shener Levent and Memduh Ener were imprisoned in August. We will continue to follow this case, and all cases before the military court, closely.

Terrorism

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department had with other government departments, concerning (a) proscribing Jemaah Islamiyah under the Terrorism Act 2000 and (b) freezing the assets of that group; and if he will make a statement. [78324]

Mr. Straw: On 23 October 2002 my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer instructed the Bank of England to issue notice requiring all UK banks and financial institutions to freeze the assets of Jemaah Islamiyah. This action was taken in co-ordination with the submission of Jemaah Islamiyah to the United Nations Sanctions Committee in New York. Jemaah Islamiyah was formally added to the United National Sanctions List under Security Council Resolution 1390 on 25 October.

On 28 October 2002 my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary laid before this House the statutory instrument for the proscription of Jemaah Islamiyah in the UK. This issue was debated by both Houses of Parliament on 30 October 2002 and the Order will now come into force on 1 November 2002.

Both of these actions were taken after close consultation between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Her Majesty's Treasury and the Home Office.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has collated concerning links between Jemaah Islamiyah and organisations (a) based in Europe, (b) with assets held in Europe and (c) with close links to groups resident in Europe; and if he will make a statement. [78325]

Mr. Straw: The Jemaah Islamiyah group based in South East Asia is not generally thought to operate outside that region and should not be confused with other Islamist groups elsewhere in the world that bear the same name. Information about terrorist groups and their finances is kept under constant review. We believe that the Jemaah Islamiyah group in South East Asia has strong links with the al Qaeda network and that al Qaeda maintains links with terrorists groups around the world, including Europe.

On 23 October 2002 the European Union co-sponsored the submission of Jemaah Islamiyah to the United Nations Sanctions Committee in New York on the basis of that groups links to al Qaeda. Jemaah Islamiyah was added to the United Nations Sanctions List under Security Council Resolution 1390 on 25 October.

Turkey

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the request by Turkey for a date for the commencement of the accession process to the EU to be given at the Copenhagen summit; and if he will make a statement. [77914]

Mr. MacShane: HMG has long been a strong supporter of Turkey's EU candidature and we look forward to Turkey's membership of the EU as soon as possible and in accordance with the conditions which all candidates have to meet. The European Council at Brussels welcomed the important reforms undertaken by the Turkish Government and said that Turkey's progress has brought forward the prospect of opening accession negotiations.

Women, Peace and Security

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of Security Council Resolution 1325 on Women, Peace and Security passed on 31October 2000. [79131]

Mr. Rammell: The UN Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on 16 October on implementation of SCR 1325. That report included a number of important points that the Government strongly supports: promoting gender equality is not just the responsibility of women; post-conflict reconstruction should be based on full observance of human rights and the principle of non-discrimination; and more effort is needed to address the problems of children associated with armed groups, particularly girls. The Secretary-General also proposed a target of 50 per cent. women in all areas of UN peace operations by 2015.

The Government strongly supports both the intention and implementation of this ground-breaking resolution. We welcome the UN's efforts to incorporate a gender perspective throughout its work, including peacekeeping and peacebuilding. We are funding a series of projects through the UN's Department of Peacekeeping Operations, UNIFEM (the UN development fund for women) and NGOs to support implementation of the resolution. We used our Presidency of the Security Council in July to host an open debate on conflict, peacekeeping and gender. We shall continue to work through the Security Council, with the UN and in our peace and development efforts for implementation of this resolution and for the benefit of women and all people striving for peace.

HEALTH

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the performance of accident and emergency wards in England; and if he will make a statement. [76255]

Mr. Lammy: Improving patients' experience of emergency care is a Government priority.

The NHS Plan set the target to reduce the maximum wait in accident and emergency (A&E) from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge to four hours or less by 2004. By the time of the first milestone in March 2002, 77 per cent. of all patients attending A&E in England spent four hours or less in A&E. This slightly exceeded the milestone which was set at 75 per cent.

To help meet the NHS Plan target, the Reforming Emergency Care Strategy was launched in October 2001. This is a long-term programme of reform and investment to provide fast effective treatment in a modern and safe environment.

Community Equipment

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the 10 most frequently prescribed items of community equipment are. [78057]

Jacqui Smith: Community equipment is prescribed according to local needs and priorities. We do not keep a central count.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new targets have been introduced to speed up the delivery of community equipment and the time taken to make minor adaptations. [78059]

Jacqui Smith: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health, made a statement to the House on 23 July 2002 concerning services for older people. He announced that by December 2004, all items of community equipment will be delivered within seven working days. This target will also apply to minor adaptations made by community equipment services.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter to him dated 13 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Anne Franke. [78043]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 21 October.

Draft Mental Health Bill

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will recommend that the Draft Mental Health Bill be considered a Special Standing Committee. [74876]

Jacqui Smith: The Government would look favourably on the idea of referring the Bill to a Special Standing Committee, as this would be helpful to examine the Bill in detail and enable us to take further evidence from many parties.

Enuresis

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to promote the availability of drinking water and adequate toilet facilities in schools to combat enuresis. [78095]

Mr. Miliband: I have been asked to reply.

The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1999 specify the toilet facilities required in all schools. They also state that a school shall have a wholesome supply of water for domestic purposes including a supply of drinking water. We are also planning to disseminate good practice advice to schools and local education authorities on drinking water provision in the light of the health risks associated with not drinking enough water.

Inpatient Treatment

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were waiting for inpatient treatment in each trust area in England at the latest available date; and of these, how many had been waiting for (a) 0 to 2, (b) 3 to 5, (c) 6 to 8, (d) 9 to 11, (e) 12 to 14 and (f) 15 plus months in each case. [77155]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of patients waiting for inpatient elective admission by months waiting, as at 31 August by national health service trust and primary care trust has been placed in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his assessment is of the forward revenue commitments for each of the next three years for each of the ring-fenced grants paid by his Department to local authorities in 2002–03. [78312]

Jacqui Smith: It is for individual local authorities to decide what forward commitments to enter into in respect of ring-fenced grant expenditure and this information is not available centrally.

Children in Care (Educational Standards)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many looked-after children have obtained (a) no GCSEs, (b) one A-G GCSE, (c) five A-G GCSEs, (d) one A*-C GCSE and (e) five A*-C GCSEs in each year since 1997; and what target his Department has set for educational standards for looked-after children in each of those years. [78427]

Jacqui Smith. The Government has established the following national public service agreement targets.

Mental Health Advocacy

Dr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent advice he has given to PCTs concerning the funding of mental health advocacy. [77107]

Jacqui Smith: Final decisions on funding for 2003–04 will be made in the autumn as part of the work on primary care trust allocations and central budgets, as such no announcements or advice on this funding have yet been made.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by the NHS on NHS magazines, briefings and literature in 2001–02. [75142]

Mr. Lammy: A breakdown of expenditure by National Health Service organisations on NHS magazines, briefings and literature could be supplied only at disproportionate cost as the information is not held centrally.

Nursing Leaders

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many structures identifying nursing leaders with responsibility for older people have been developed as part of the milestones set out in the National Service Framework for Older People, page 172. [78424]

Jacqui Smith: Information about progress against the April 2002 milestones set within the national service framework for older people is currently being collected.

One-stop Primary Care

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding is available from his Department for investment in 100 One-Stop Primary Care centres in (a) all and (b) rural England; and how much was spent in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03 to date in (A) all and (B) rural England. [78407]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Plan announced that up to £1 billion will be invested in primary care facilities to substantially refurbish or replace 3,000 general practitioner premises and provide 500 one-stop primary care centres, of which 100 are expected to provide services accessible to rural populations, by 2004.

In August 2002 an announcement was made that £22 million of public capital was to be used to accelerate 100 one-stop primary care centre schemes for completion in 2003.

Overseas Surgical Teams

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many overseas surgical teams have been brought to the UK by the NHS; where they have worked; and how many operations they have carried out. [78096]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service has brought six overseas clinical teams to the United Kingdom. The team at Central Middlesex hospital has carried out 516 general surgical operations. The team at Hillingdon hospital has carried out 350 orthopaedic operations. The team at South Tyneside NHS trust has carried out 39 orthopaedic operations. The team at east Somerset has carried out 12 general surgical operations. The team at Morecambe Bay hospitals NHS trust has carried out 313 cataract operations. The team at mid-Staffordshire carried out two cataract operations.

Prison Health Care Workers

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prison health care workers have acquired an NVQ in custodial care. [77999]

Jacqui Smith: There are 36 prison health care workers currently enrolled on the custodial care National Vocational Qualification. They will transfer to the new custodial health care NVQ when this NVQ has been accredited by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority.

Radiographers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the (a) Health Professional Council registration fees for radiographers for each of the last three years and (b) proposed registration fees for the next two years. [76820]

Mr. Hutton: Radiographers and other health professions regulated by the Health Professions Council (HPC) are subject to independent self-regulation, which is self-financing. Since 1990 the registration fee has only increased by £10. For the last three years it has remained at the level of £22.

The HPC's role has expanded substantially since it succeeded the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine (CPSM) and the HPC has recently consulted on proposals for the new register. This included the level of fees, which it proposes to set at between £65-£85 per year, payable on a two yearly basis, commencing April 2003.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) radiographers and (b) vacant posts for radiographers there were in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) health authority and (ii) region. [76656]

Mr. Hutton The information requested has been placed in the Library between September 1997 and September 2001, the number of diagnostic radiographers has increased by 800 from 10,360 to 11,160 and the number of therapeutic radiographers has increased by 130 from 1,410 to 1,540.

Redundancy Payments (NHS Executives)

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how redundancy payments are calculated for executives of NHS trusts made redundant by trust mergers; and what the average such payment has been. [77242]

Mr. Hutton: The arrangements for the calculation of redundancy payments for National Health Service staff are set out in Section 45 and 46 of the Whitley General Council Handbook. A copy of this document is available in the Library.

Payments to executives of NHS trusts made redundant by trust mergers are not collected centrally.

Social Services Departments

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what timetable he proposes for the changes to social services departments announced recently. [76996]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 28 October 2002]: At the Annual Social Services Conference on 16 October my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, set out a number of proposals for changes to the way services are delivered. Our plans for implementation include:

Children's trusts: We plan to establish pilots for children's trusts during 2003.

Reimbursement: It is hoped subject to parliamentary time, to introduce legislation, which will allow us to implement reimbursement for delayed discharge from hospital.

Care trusts: The first four care trusts were established on 1 April 2002. A further five sites are now working to develop care trust proposals locally, to be up and running by April 2003.

Regulation for direct payments: Regulations to ensure all older people assessed as having care needs are provided with the choice of direct payments will be issued for consultation shortly with the intention to implement by January 2003.

Strategic commissioning group report: I have asked the strategic commissioning group to report to me in 2003, on how local voluntary and community organisations could play a bigger part in the delivery of social services.

Less bureaucracy: We have reduced significantly the number of planning documents associated with social services grants from seven this year to two next year, and to one the year after.

Greater freedoms: From the next financial year the best performing social services departments will have the freedom to spend social services grant on any aspect of social care, the right to carry out resources between financial years, less form filling and less inspection. We are currently discussing with my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister further freedoms for the best performing councils.

Suicide

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) by what means the National Institute for Mental Health in England will identify suicide hotspots; and who will have responsiblity to take action in respect of them; [78000]

(2) what action he plans to take in respect of locations at which suicide is frequently committed. [78049]

Jacqui Smith: The National Institute for Mental Health in England (NIMHE) will be working with a number of local agencies to develop guidance on identifying and taking appropriate action at suicide hotspots. This will involve close partnership working with a number of local agencies including police and emergency services, local authorities, the national health service and voluntary sector, railway authorities and coroners. Specific intervention and prevention measures will depend on the nature and location of each hotspot identified.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is carrying out the suicide and open verdict on the railways report; and when it is expected to be published. [78048]

Jacqui Smith: The suicide and open verdict on the railway network (SOVRN) project is a three-year study. SOVRN is co-sponsored by railway safety and the national health service, managed through Doncaster and South Humber Healthcare NHS Trust, and in collaboration with the University of Sheffield, Community Health Sheffield NHS Trust and the University of Nottingham. The report is due to be published in December 2002.

Truancy

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role the Department of Health and its statutory agencies will play in truancy sweeps. [78028]

Jacqui Smith: Health and social services were involved in truancy sweeps in 82 of the local education authorities, which reported on the May truancy sweep exercise. Health professionals, such as community psychiatric nurses and social workers, focus on follow-up work with individual children and/or families.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the number of people waiting more than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) nine months and (d) 12 months for (i) speech and language therapy, (ii) treatment for depression, (iii) occupational therapy and (iv) chiropody services; and if he will make a statement. [76286]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 October 2002]: Waiting times data are collected on in-patient elective admissions and first outpatient appointments following general practitioner referral and are specifically consultant led services with data attributed to the consultant's main specialty function. Data on patients' waiting times are not collected by the categories in the question.

Audiology Services

Dr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to set national standards for waiting times in audiology services from time of referral to fitting. [77108]

Jacqui Smith: There are no plans, at this time, to set national standards for waiting times for audiology services. The modernising hearing aid services project is being extended so that by the end of this financial year there will be 50 sites involved, with at least a further 15 equipped to supply digital hearing aids from next April. A new, more streamlined patient process will be introduced at these second wave sites from the outset and at first wave sites over the next few months. In addition we are in the middle of a pilot which is looking at the role the private sector can play in reducing waiting times for supply of digital hearing aids. We will continue to look at ways of reducing the waiting times for hearing aid services as the project moves on.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Records Bureau

Mrs Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the findings of the investigation into the Criminal Records Bureau; and what changes he proposes to implement. [75019]

Hilary Benn: In early September the Home Secretary appointed an independent team to review the situation at the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB). The review is continuing. The main focus of the team's work centres on what needs to be done to ensure the medium and long-term success of the service. They are taking a fundamental look at all aspects of the CRB's operation and will report to the Home Secretary in due course.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what his latest estimate is of the time for each Criminal Records Bureau check on (a) teachers and (b) classroom assistants in England and Wales; [74349]

(2) what his latest estimate is of the time taken for each Criminal Records Bureau check on childminder applicants in England and Wales. [74346]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 15 October 2002]: The estimated average turnaround of checks processed by the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) remains at approximately six weeks. This is measured from the point at which a correctly completed form is received by CRB, accompanied by all relevant supporting details. No distinction is made in relation to the profession of an applicant. They are all subject to the same level of service.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalties have been incurred by Capita on the Criminal Records Bureau contract; and if he will make a statement. [74123]

Hilary Benn: There is provision for penalties for delay or poor performance. Liquidated damages have been incurred by Capita for delay although the details remain commercial in confidence and cannot be divulged. The main priority is for the Criminal Records Bureau and Capita to collaborate in order to achieve further improvement in the quality of service.

Asylum Seekers

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which professional organisations were consulted prior to the decision to withdraw asylum seekers' right to work; [77118]

(2)what representations he received concerning the right of new asylum seekers to get permission to work after six months being removed (a) before and (b) subsequent to the announcement. [77117]

Beverley Hughes: We received a number of written representations regarding the general issue of asylum seekers and entitlement to work earlier this year as part of the wider consultation exercise on our White Paper, 'Secure Borders, Safe Haven'. All of these responses have been placed in the Library, with the exception of those respondents who indicated they did not wish their responses to be published.

We also received representations fromthe Refugee Council following our announcement to end the concession.

We did not consult directly with other organisations immediately prior to announcing abolition of the concession. Improved timeliness of initial decisions by the Immigration Nationality Directorate had made the concession largely irrelevant in practice so wider consultation would have added no real value.

Mr Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from Cameroon applied for asylum in the UK in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) to date this year; and what percentage was successful in each year. [77628]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is given in the table. Data on initial decisions are independent of applications data, and do not all necessarily relate to applications lodged in the same period.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed asylum seekers from Sri Lanka have been repatriated in each month for the last 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [78077]

Beverley Hughes: The latest 12 months data available for removals of Sri Lankan principal asylum applicants is for April 2001 to March 2002 and are given in the table.

I regret that it is not possible to determine how many were repatriated, as persons removed from the UK are not necessarily returned to their country of origin. Information on the destination of those removed is not collated centrally and could only be obtained by examination of individual casefiles at disproportionate cost.

Mr Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent information on in-country conditions in Sri Lanka have been received from (a) other Government departments and (b) other organisations relating to the return of failed Tamil asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [78082]

Beverley Hughes: The Sri Lanka country assessment was updated in October 2002. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and British High Commission in Colombo both contribute up to date information and check the accuracy of the document. A range of other information is used from organisations such as Amnesty International, the British Refugee Council and the Medical Foundation for the Care of Victims of Torture. A full list of the source material from these organisations can be found at annex D of the Country Assessment, which will be posted imminently on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate website at www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary met Beverley Bernard, the Acting Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE), on 30 October. This was the first official meeting as, due to diary commitments, previous meetings have not been possible.

Criminal Justice

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to alter public perception found in Improving Public Attitudes to the Criminal Justice System, Home Office Research Study 245, that crime was increasing. [73782]

Hilary Benn: The Government believe that the key to improving public perception of crime and criminal justice is to continue to deliver reductions in crime and improvements in the way the criminal justice system operates.

The recently published White Paper, Justice for All, set out what needs to be done to modernise and improve the Criminal Justice System (CJS). The Home Office has been set targets for reducing crime and the fear of crime, improving the delivery of justice and increasing confidence in the criminal justice system.

The Government are committed to improving the prevention and detection of crime, convicting the guilty and rehabilitating offenders so they do not offend again. Reform will also ensure that justice is seen to serve and protect the interests of the community, and especially victims of crime.

The presentation of statistical information about crime has been made clearer and more comprehensive by combining publication of recorded crime statistics and information from the British Crime Survey. An objective in all our communication activity is to work with our partners to close the gap between the public perception that crime is rising against the reality of long term falls in crime. The media make an important contribution to public perceptions of crime, and efforts are being made to encourage responsible reporting of crime. We are also exploring alternative ways to provide accurate information about crime to the public.

The Government have made a commitment to increase the number of crimes that result in the perpetrator being brought to justice, an initiative called 'Narrowing the Justice Gap'. A co-ordinated strategy based on: tackling weaknesses in the criminal justice process; targeting types of offender, particularly persistent offenders; and targeting specific types of offence, aims to bring 1.2 million offences to justice by 2005–06. Narrowing the justice gap not only reduces crime but also demonstrates that the criminal justice system is effective and responsive to the needs and concerns of victims and witnesses. The perception that criminals are "getting away with it" is hugely damaging to confidence levels. The Government have made improvement in this area their key aim for the CJS.

We also have a responsibility to promote confidence in the CJS and we are actively working on a programme of work in this area. This will be based on ensuring that the public are aware of the impact of reform and improvements in the delivery of justice.

Entitlement Cards

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the consulation is due to end on the issue of entitlement cards. [78352]

Beverley Hughes: The consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud published by my right hon Friend the Home Secretary on 3 July stated that the consultation period would last until 10 January 2003.

The Government has decided to extend the consultation period to 31 January 2003 to allow organisations a little more time to prepare their responses.

Fireworks

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths and serious injuries have been caused by fireworks in the UK in each of the last 20 years; and if he will make a statement. [76151]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The years for which the number of deaths and injuries from fireworks are available are specified in the table. These figures are extracted from the annual DTI firework injuries statistics based on returns from the accident and emergency departments of hospitals in Great Britain. They are collected over a 4-week period in October and November each year. Serious injuries are not separately identified in the statistics.

Mal Hussain

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a public inquiry into the case of Mr Mal Hussain of the Ryelands estate in Lancaster and the role of the public authorities in protecting him from racial harassment; and if he will make a statement. [77338]

Beverley Hughes: This matter is under consideration and a decision will be announced shortly.

Registered Charities (Sports Clubs)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1)if he will list community amateur sports clubs that are now registered as charities; [78012]

(2) how many community amateur sports clubs (a) have applied and (b) are registered with the Charity Commission as a community amateur sports club. [78014]

Beverley Hughes: This is a matter for the Charity Commission as the Government Department that registers charities in England and Wales. The Director of Operations of the Charity Commission will write to the hon Member and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

African Natural Resources

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions her Department has had with the Governments of (a) Rwanda and (b) Uganda regarding illegal exploitation of natural resources by their citizens in the DRC; and what action these Governments plan to take; [77060]

(2) what discussions her Department has had with the Governments of (a) Rwanda, (b) the DRC, (c) Uganda and (d) Burundi regarding border controls and their ability to monitor the flow of natural resources with particular reference to (i) diamonds and (ii) cotton. [77061]

Clare Short: There have been regular discussions with the Governments of Uganda and Rwanda at both ministerial and official levels since the first UN panel report on exploitation of resources in the DRC was published. We have urged both Governments to work openly and constructively with the panel team and take seriously any allegations of exploitation. The final UN panel report was issued on 18 October. The Government of Uganda have already established a judicial enquiry into the allegations in a previous report, and this report is due on 15 November. The Government of Rwanda have rejected this report, as they did earlier ones, on the grounds that it is politically motivated and lacking in corroborative evidence. While we share many of the Government of Rwanda's criticisms of the report, we will continue to encourage the Government of Rwanda to take action to address the panel's accusations in an open manner. We believe the most important focus for future work is achieve peace and work to help the DRC and other Great Lakes countries put trade and the exploitation of mineral resources on to a well-regulated, transparent basis.

Burundi

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the peace process in Burundi and the assistance provided by the British Government to that process. [76899]

Clare Short: We are supporting all international efforts to promote an end to conflict and achieve a secure and lasting peace in Burundi, through full implementation of the Arusha Peace Accord, as a necessary prerequisite for sustained economic development. We are at the same time helping to address the immediate material needs of Burundi's people by supporting humanitarian programmes largely through non-governmental channels.

There have been some positive developments in the on-going peace process. The Regional Summit held in Dar-es-Salaam on 7 October welcomed the recent signing of a cease-fire agreement with the Transitional Government of Burundi by two of the remaining rebel forces not party to the Arusha Peace Accord, CNDD-FDD (Jean-Bosco) and PALIPEHUTU-FNL (Mugabarabona). The summit agreed an extension of 30 days to allow for the negotiation of similar cease-fire agreements with the two largest remaining rebel groups CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) and PALIPEHUTU-FNL (Rwasa).

The British Government have been co-ordinating with other donors to help the facilitation efforts of the South Africans, Gabonese and Tanzanians. We have committed £250,000 to this through ACCORD, a South African NGO involved in peace-building in the Great Lakes region and elsewhere. We are also providing support to peace and reconciliation activities in Burundi through other NGOs

Cote d'Ivoire

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the humanitarian impact of the conflict in Cote d'Ivoire; what response her

Department and the international community have made to those needs; what steps are being taken to establish peace; and if she will make a statement. [76923]

Clare Short: We have not undertaken an independent assessment of the humanitarian impact of the conflict in Cote d'Ivoire. However we are monitoring the situation closely and are in regular contact with UN agencies in the field. The UN held an Emergency Regional Contingency Planning meeting in Accra from 17–18 October to discuss the situation. We are awaiting their assessment of likely humanitarian needs.

We are working closely with the international community to bring about a swift and peaceful resolution to the conflict. We consider that the best hope for peace lies in an African led solution and we are supporting the efforts of ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) to mediate in the conflict. An ECOWAS mediation team has succeeded at establishing contact with the rebels and gaining commitment from both parties to a ceasefire and the start of negotiations. It is also proposed that an ECOWAS monitoring force be established to replace the French troops currently providing a buffer force between the two sides. The plans for this force are still under discussion. The UK has provided a military adviser to assist ECOWAS in their efforts.

Departmental Job Vacancies

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many job vacancies there were at (a) administrative assistant or equivalent, (b) administrative officer or equivalent, (c) administrative executive officer, (d) higher executive officer, (e) senior executive officer, (f) grade 7 principal and (g) all positions above grade 7 level in her Department for jobs located in London and (i) the south-east between 1 April 2001 and 31 March; and what is the total employment for each civil service grade. [76551]

Clare Short [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The total numbers of staff in each civil service grade employed in DFID's London headquarters is set out in the table. There are no DFID staff employed in the south-east region outside London. Details of vacancies are not collated centrally and are, therefore, unavailable. However, it is worth pointing out that, by and large, DFID does not have difficulty in recruiting staff in London and vacancies rarely remain unfilled for any length of time.

Total staff in London—position as at 1 April 2001	Grade
45	C2 (administrative assistant equivalent)
137	C1 (administrative officer equivalent)
130	B2 (executive officer equivalent)
184	B1 (higher executive officer equivalent)
39	A3 (senior executive officer equivalent)
140	A2 (grade 7 equivalent)
164	above A2 (grade 6 and above)

Ghana

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions her Department has had with the Government of Ghana regarding urban street children; [76971]

(2) what initiatives her Department supports to eliminate the poverty of urban street children in Ghana. [76972]

Clare Short: The Government are committed to supporting the Government of Ghana to deliver its priorities against the Ghana Poverty Reduction Strategy (GPRS). Children in difficult circumstances, such as street children, are identified as a vulnerable and excluded group in the GPRS. Planned Government of Ghana interventions include slum upgrading and partnership programmes with non-government organisations that seek to safeguard children. The Government are also supporting civil society initiatives that protect children in Ghana and West Africa through the Civil Society Challenge Fund and Partnership Programme Agreements with Action Aid and Save the Children.

Intellectual Property Rights

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the report of the Commission on Intellectual Property Rights; and if she will make a statement. [76969]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meriden on 28 October 2002, Official Report, columns 548–49W.

Overseas Aid (Indonesia)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial assistance her Department (a) has offered and (b) plans to offer the Government of Indonesia to assist with the (i) victims of the terrorist bomb in Bali and (ii) loss of livelihoods incurred by employees within the tourist sector in Bali. [76975]

Clare Short: The immediate medical needs of Indonesian victims of the terrorist bomb have been met by the Government of Indonesia and Balinese non-government organisations. Officials from my Department have undertaken an assessment of longer term needs, alongside colleagues from the United Nations, Australia and the United States. Based on this assessment we are considering a range of activities to support victims of the bombing, including post trauma counselling, conflict prevention initiatives and technical support for the Indonesian authorities in Bali.

In addition, DFID, other donors and the Government of Indonesia, are assessing the impact of the bombing on the national and local economies, and will consider how best donors can support economic recovery. My Department will contribute to the international effort once needs are defined.

Presidential Meeting

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting between President Museveni and President Kagame in London last week. [76970]

Clare Short: President Museveni and President Kagame recommitted themselves and their Governments to the Understanding they signed last November in London on not interfering in each others' political and security affairs. They agreed to make more regular and effective use of the mechanisms that had been put in place to resolve differences and to avoid recourse to the use of the media. The UK agreed to continue to act as third party in this process.

Equally importantly, Presidents Museveni and Kagame agreed to work together to achieve pace and stability in the region. They urged President Mbeki of South Africa, as Chairman of the African Union, to convene an urgent regional summit to call on all parties to fully implement the Pretoria and Luanda peace agreements.

Presidents Museveni and Kagame shared my deep concern at the situation in Burundi and agreed we should all work together, especially with the Governments of Tanzania and South Africa, to get a full ceasefire and support the Transitional National Government under the Arusha Accords.

Sudan

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she is taking to help end the war in Sudan; and if she will make a statement. [77038]

Clare Short: The UK role in supporting the peace process is led jointly by the FCO and DFID. The UK Special Representative for Sudan, Alan Goulty, leads the UK observer delegation at the peace talks. He is supported by a joint FCO-DFID Sudan Unit. He and his team co-ordinate with the mediators and other observers at Machakos so that we can complement each other's efforts to deliver the best results. We carry out intensive consultations with the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Khartoum and elsewhere. We ensure that UK policy and the peace process are fully understood by other interested Governments and co-ordinate with international partners, including the EU; our collective approach to implementing an eventual peace agreement. This year, we have committed over £8 million to support both humanitarian work and the peace process.

UNHCR

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) assessment her Department has made of safeguards against and (b) discussions she has had with the UNHCR regarding the sexual exploitation of women in refugee camps. [76907]

Clare Short: My Department has closely monitored developments regarding the investigation by the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) into allegations of sexual exploitation of refugee women and girls by humanitarian aid workers and peacekeepers in refugee camps in West Africa. While the OIOS report found no involvement by UNHCR staff in acts of sexual exploitation, from a total of 43 cases of possible sexual exploitation investigated by the OIOS team 10 cases were substantiated by evidence. This finding confirms that the issue of sexual exploitation is a significant one and that it is not just confined to West Africa—but wherever refugees find themselves in similarly desperate and vulnerable circumstances.

The report crucially identifies several factors which contribute to sexual exploitation in refugee communities including aspects of refugee camp life, camp structure, camp security, food and services distribution, employment opportunities, profiles of camp workers, and the quality and quantities of food and other relief items distributed.

UNHCR has, in partnership with other concerned UN agencies, instituted a number of remedial measures and preventative actions to enhance the prevention and response to sexual and gender-based violence. Specifically, in West Africa these include: increasing the accountability of humanitarian workers through the design of country-specific standards, applicable to all UN agencies and international and local NGOs; raising awareness of rights and entitlements in refugee communities through education and advocacy campaigns; increases in-field presence and improved training in sexual training and gender-based issues for UNHCR staff; improved reporting and monitoring procedures to speed up the identification of victims; building on existing programmes to better facilitate equal access and control of material resources as well as strengthening support to victims and groups at risk.

There exist additional measures which extend to the rest of Africa which, in turn, complement UNHCR's efforts on a global front, specifically the UNHCR Code of Conduct which aims to guide the behaviour and attitude of all UNHCR international and local staff in terms of the standards of conduct that are expected to be adhered to in the UN Charter and the Staff Regulation and Rules.

We will, through our close relationship with UNHCR in the field and through our participation at the Standing and Executive Committees in Geneva, continue to monitor progress on all these fronts.

World Food Programme (Africa)

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contribution her Department has made to (a) the World Food Programme for Saharawi refugees and (b) the additional appeal by the WFP for funding for Saharawi refugees in the last year. [77399]

Clare Short: DFID has not contributed directly to the World Food Programme (WFP) funding for Saharawi refugees. Our assistance to the Saharawi refugees is channelled through contributions to the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO). A new global plan agreed by the EC in May will provide €14.34 million of assistance to the Saharawi refugees over a 15-month period. The total assistance provided since 1993 is over €95 million, including over €79 million in food aid co-ordinated by ECHO, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the WFP. ECHO works in close co-ordination and co-operation with the WFP to provide basic food items to the Saharawi refugees. 19 per cent. of ECHO funding comes from my Department's budget.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what organisations she met on her recent visit to Yugoslavia; and with whom she had discussions. [77295]

Clare Short: I visited Belgrade on 7 October 2002, to meet with various Republic of Serbia and Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) representatives; I then flew to Pristina to have meetings with Kosovo and UN representatives, returning to the UK on 9 October. Meetings held were as follows:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Firefighters' Strike

Mr. Evans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what preparations he has made to ensure the safety and continuity of service to the public in the event of a firefighters' strike. [77668]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister for Local Government on 28 October 2002, Official Report, column 527W.

Public Guardianship Office

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Public Guardianship Office public service agreement contains assurances about the time it would normally take to deal with cases; and if he will make a statement. [77774]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Public Guardianship Office (PGO) has Service Delivery Agreement targets, (SDAs) supporting the Lord Chancellor's Department Public Service Agreements (PSAs).

The PGO's targets are as follows:

> by 2004 to complete the review of 100 per cent. of accounts received or have requested further information within four weeks of receipt, with an interim target of 95 per cent. within six weeks by 2002 (to apply to both Receivership and Protection Divisions); > and by 2004, to collect 65per cent. of accounts within two calendar months of the accounting end date, 85 within four calendar months of the accounting end date, and 100 per cent. within six calendar months of the accounting end date referring cases to the Court of Protection where necessary or taking other steps to ensure proper accounts are produced on behalf of clients [applies to Protection clients only].

The PGO is on course to meet these targets.

Service to the Community

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to encourage employers to enable employees to undertake service to the community for magisterial and other duties without being out of pocket; and if he will make a statement. [78322]

Yvette Cooper: Many employers view service as a magistrate as a valuable contribution and allow their employees paid time off to undertake their duties. Where magistrates do not receive paid time off they can claim a financial loss allowance linked to average gross earnings. The LCD is working with the Magistrates Association, with whom it has produced a guide for employers, and through local Advisory Committees, who are in touch with businesses in their area, to encourage employers to support staff who wish to serve the community in this way

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Women Entrepreneurs

32. Mr. Huw Edwards What she is doing to increase the number of women setting up their own businesses. [76452]

Ms Hewitt: The Cross-cutting Review of Government Services for Small Businesses, published earlier this month, reinforced our commitment to encourage more women entrepreneurs. Yesterday I attended the launch of Prowess, an organisation promoting women's enterprise, which is supported by the Small Business Service's Phoenix Fund. The SBS is working with Prowess and key Departments to develop a strategic framework to foster women's enterprise.

Race and Employment Directives

34. Joan Ruddock: If she will make a statement on the implementation of the Article 13 Directives on Race and Employment and the feasibility study on a single equality body. [76454]

Ms Hewitt: My hon Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) last week published a summary paper setting out the Government's plans to take forward implementation of the Race and Employment Directives, and a consultation paper on creating the right framework to support equality legislation.

Equal Pay

33. Michael Fabricant: What proportion of her time was spent over the last month on the pay gap between the sexes. [76453]

Ms Hewitt: In the last month I have launched the public consultation on the Equal Pay Questionnaire. My hon Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) and I have hosted the first annual Castle Awards ceremony, which recognised steps taken by employers to address issues of pay inequality. Because the provisions of appropriate childcare for working parents can help in closing the gender pay gap, I have also been working with my noble Friend the Baroness Ashton of Upholland and colleagues in other Government Departments on developing a delivery plan for childcare.

35. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister for Women what plans she has to introduce legislation to enforce equal pay by criminal law sanction. [76455]

Ms Hewitt: I have no plans to enforce equal pay by criminal law sanction. Since the Equal Pay Act was introduced in 1970 the pay gap has reduced from 37 per cent. to 19 per cent. today.

We have amended the law to provide for equal pay questionnaires and every Government Department and Agency is conducting an Equal Pay review by April 2003.

36. Jim Knight: What steps she is taking to reduce the pay gap between the sexes. [76456]

Ms Hewitt: The Government has set in place a number of measures designed to tackle the gender pay gap. We are leading by example, through our commitment to equal pay reviews in the Civil Service'; we are making it easier for women to get equal pay through changes in the Employment Act 2002; we are making it easier for employers to pay fairly through the work of the Fair Play Champions and the Castle Awards, and we are tackling the wider causes of the pay gap by helping mothers stay attached to the labour market, investing more resources than any other Government in childcare, improving the skill levels of those already in the labour market and helping employers make the most of their female workforce.

Public Appointments

37. Dr. Harris: What progress has been made in increasing the proportion of women appointed to non-departmental public bodies since 1997. [76457]

Ms Hewitt: At 31 March 2001, as set out in Public Bodies 2001, 34 per cent of appointments were held by women, this is 2 per cent. up since 1997.

We are determined to deliver on our aim that women should hold 45–50 per cent. of public appointments made by the majority of Government departments by the end of 2005 and to address any constraints on diversity and equal representation.

Throughout 2002, we have led a national outreach campaign on women and public appointments, we have reached over 2000 women across the country and the vast majority have said they are now more likely to apply for public appointments.

Political Candidates

38. Mr. Graham Allen: What assistance she offers to political parties who wish to reduce the imbalance between the sexes among their candidates. [76458]

Ms Hewitt: The Sex Discrimination (Election Candidates) Act received Royal Assent in February this year. It enables political parties, if they wish, to use positive measures to reduce inequality in the numbers of men and women elected.

We are also reforming government to make it a more attractive option to women, through improving the hours and working environments at all levels of government. However, it is for political parties themselves to decide arrangements for selecting parliamentary candidates. The Government has provided the framework and I am encouraged by the level of cross party support we received for the Sex Discrimination (Election Candidates) Act. It has galvanised debates within all parties and I very much hope that as a result we shall see more women being selected to stand.

Greenfield Report

39. Dr. Gibson : When she will release the Greenfield Report. [76460]

Ms Hewitt: I am looking forward to receiving the final version of the noble Baroness Greenfield's report on women in Science, Engineering and Technology. I expect to receive the final version of Baroness Greenfield's report on how we can better promote women in Science, Engineering and Technology by the end of next month. The Department will publish the report as soon as we receive it.

Work-life Balance

40. Mr. Crausby: What action she is taking to enable working women to balance work and family life. [76461]

Ms Hewitt: From next April, working women will benefit from the enhanced maternity pay and leave; and mothers, as well as fathers with children under the age of 6, or disabled children under 18, will have the right to apply for flexible working arrangements. Their employers will have a statutory duty to consider their requests seriously. The Government's Work-Life Balance Campaign also encourages all employers to follow best practice and offer flexible working arrangements to the benefit of all working women.

By 2003–4, annual investment in the Government's National Childcare Strategy will have increased to over £200 million, a three-fold increase on the £66 million in 2000–1, to benefit 1.6 million children in England.

Two new tax credits will be introduced next April, the Child Tax Credit, income related and paid directly to the main carer in the family; and the Working Tax Credit paid to low income working people with or without children. These will replace the existing tax credits, and simplify the system to ensure that people get financial support when they most need it.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Chief Inspector of Criminal Justice

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress made in appointing the new Chief Inspector of Criminal Justice. [76301]

Mr. Browne: Work is ongoing on a revised Implementation Plan for the Criminal Justice Review, which will include details of progress made on the establishment of a Criminal Justice Inspectorate and the appointment of a new Chief Inspector of Criminal Justice in Northern Ireland. The appointment will be made through open competition. We hope to publish the revised Implementation Plan by early 2003.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the additional organisations to come within the remit of the new Chief Inspector of Criminal Justice. [76302]

Mr. Browne: The Lord Privy Seal (The Lord Williams of Mostyn) will shortly be writing to Members, following an undertaking at Lords Third Reading stage of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act, to update them on progress made on the consultation process on which additional organisations might be added to the list of organisations which will come under the remit of the Chief Inspector of Criminal Justice. We hope to bring forward a draft order, using the order-making power at section 46(6) of the Act, before the Christmas recess.

CBI Business Manifesto

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the Business Manifesto issued by the Confederation of British Industry for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [77600]

Mr. Pearson: I welcome this Business Manifesto, which sets out how the CBI sees the important interaction between the public and private sectors to achieve a better economic future. The Manifesto addresses many of the issues which are of critical importance to the development of the Northern Ireland economy and which relate closely to the strategic priorities developed by the Economic Development Forum. I look forward, with my ministerial colleagues, to exploring the proposals contained in the Manifesto.

Down Lisburn Trust

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to improve levels of funding to the Down Lisburn Trust by the Eastern Health and Social Services Board. [77596]

Mr. Browne: The Eastern Health and Social Services Board is currently reviewing the equitable distribution of resources to its sub-board populations in light of the recently published results of the 2001 Census of population. Based on the results of this review, the Board will develop a strategy to address the locality equity issue. Following public consultation the implementation of the resultant strategy should commence from April 2003.

Downpatrick (New Hospital)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce a new hospital for Downpatrick in December. [77597]

Mr. Browne: Decisions on the way forward on the redevelopment of the Downe Hospital will be taken following analysis and consideration of the responses to the consultation paper "Developing Better Services—Modernising Hospitals and Reforming Structures". While I would like to be in a position to announce the way forward before the end of this year, it is not possible, at this stage, to be definitive about when decisions will be taken.

Lee James Booth

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason a post-mortem report was not made available to the bereaved parents of Lee James Booth until 22 July; and whether it is the normal practice for fluids to be administered by mouth so soon after major surgery. [76650]

Mr. Browne: I understand that in seeking to respond to the high volume of calls from distressed relatives, pathologists were not able to make the report available to the parents of Lee James Booth until that date. The Royal Victoria Hospital has apologised to the family for the distress that this delay in conveying the report caused all those concerned.

The Royal Victoria Hospital has advised that it is unable to comment on the reasons for any actions taken in respect of Lee James Booth as these would have been contained in the patient's medical record which is no longer available, having been destroyed after 25 years.

Post-mortem Forms

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland where post-mortem forms (a) signed and (b) unsigned by relatives are stored; and for how many years they are kept in storage. [76631]

Mr. Browne: Normal practice is to keep post mortem consent forms with the patient's medical record. In the case of adults these are kept for eight years. Children's charts are kept for 25 years

Royal Victoria Hospital

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland during what period Dr. Molloy was the resident heart surgeon/consultant at the Royal Victoria Hospital; and during this time, what his heart surgery (a) death and (b) success rate was. [76632]

Mr. Browne: The information requested is not available.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the clergy who have officiated at the dignified disposal of retained organs at the Royal Victoria Hosptial since 1972. [76634]

Mr. Browne: It was not normal practice for clergy to be present at the disposal of retained organs. The Hospital has advised that none were present under the auspices of the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will initiate an inquiry into (a) the loss of 10 years' records at the Royal Victoria Hospital and (b) the numbers of organs disposed of in clear-outs at the hospital's organ and tissue store. [76635]

Mr. Browne: As the Human Organs Inquiry observed, it was never anticipated that the records of post mortems would come under such scrutiny so many years after being written. They are not generally computerised and some of them have been lost over time. The inquiry report drew attention to the inadequacy of record-keeping systems, including difficulties in identifying and tracking organs once they were removed. An inquiry into the loss of these particular records is not considered necessary, and my Department has established a steering group to see that improvements in record keeping will be identified and implemented. The method of record keeping previously used within the Royal does not allow for information on the numbers of organs disposed of in clear-outs at the hospitals organ and tissue store to be collated.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when an organ was last retained following a post-mortem performed at the Royal Victoria Hospital; and what access relatives have to information as to what happened to retained organs. [76639]

Mr. Browne: The Royal Victoria Hospital has informed me that on occasion it is still necessary to retain organs for examination. This is only done with the fully informed consent of relatives who agree in advance on what will happen to the retained organs.

Mr. Andrew Adonis

David Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list the duties and responsibilities of Mr. Andrew Adonis; what dealings he has directly with Ministers; to whom he reports; and whether he has applied for leave of absence; [78351]

(2) on what basis Mr Andrew Adonis was appointed; and for how long it is intended he remains in his present post. [78350]

The Prime Minister: I appointed Andrew Adonis on 20 April 1998 as a special adviser under the terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers and in line with the requirements of paragraph 50 of the Ministerial Code.

Mr Adonis is Head of Policy in my office. The duties and responsibilities of special advisers are set out in the Code of Conduct for Special Advisers at Schedule 1 to the Model Contract.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Mr. Watson: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under section 59(1) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [79201]

The Prime Minister: A copy of the annual report for 2001 by the right hon. Lord Justice Simon Brown has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 60 (4) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. The confidential annex to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 60 (5) of the Act and in line with the Commissioner's recommendation.

Lord Justice Simon Brown has served as Commissioner for the Security Service, the Secret Intelligence Service and Government Communications Head Quarters since his appointment on 1 April 2000 under the Security Service Act 1989 and the Intelligence Services Act 1994. Since 2 October 2000 his role has continued as Intelligence Services Commissioner by virtue of Section 59 (1) of the regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. This is his second report. I am very grateful to him for all his work as Commissioner.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under section 57 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [79202]

The Prime Minister: A copy of the report for 2001, by the right hon. Sir. Swinton Thomas, has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 58(6) of the Investigation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. The confidential annex to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 58(7) of the Act and in accordance with the Commissioner's recommendations. Sir. Swinton was originally appointed Commissioner in April 2000 under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, continuing in the role from 2 October 2000 under Section 57 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act. This is his second report. I am very grateful to him for all his work as Commissioner.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Departmental Websites

Dr. Cable: To ask the President of the Council if he will list the website links associated with his Department, including sites now dormant or closed, and indicating whether they are live, dormant or closed; what the start up costs were for each site listed; what the operating costs were in each year since start up for each site; which company hosted each site; what assessment takes place for each site; which company does the assessment; if he will place the assessment reports in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [75578]

Mr. Robin Cook: The following links, all of which are live, point to my Department's main website (www.privycouncil.gov.uk).

www.privy-council.org.uk
www.privycouncil.com
www.privycouncil.co.uk

The cost of registering all these names was £575.75. The information on start-up costs is currently not available as the site has been in operation only since July 2002.

The site is hosted by XM London who regularly review feedback from users. The Department intends to review the content and style of the website after it has been in operation for a year.

Focus Groups

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Council what use he and his Department has made of focus group research since June 2001; if he will identify for each research project the topics covered, the person or organisation carrying out the research, and the total cost; and if he will publish the research on his Department's website. [74984]

Mr. Robin Cook: My Department has not made use of focus group research since June 2001.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Science and Engineering Education

10. Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what discussions she has had with her ministerial colleagues on the promotion in the workplace of science and engineering education among 16 year olds. [76427]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills has lead responsibility for education matters, but I and other Ministerial colleagues, notably my noble Friend the Minister for Science and Innovation, are also interested and discuss these matters with our colleagues as and when appropriate.

20. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the initiatives her Department has been developing to encourage entrepreneurial education for science and engineering students. [76440]

Ms Hewitt: The Department introduced the Science Enterprise Challenge to establish a network of centres in UK universities, specialising in the teaching and practice of entrepreneurialism and commercialisation in science and technology.

Thirteen Science Enterprise Centres have been established involving 54 UK universities with £43.9 million of government funding.

Post Office Card Account

9. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what plans she has to promote the use of the Post Office card accounts in rural and urban post offices. [76426]

Mr. Timms: The post office card account is one of a range of accounts which people will be able from next year to receive benefit payments into. Our aim is that people should be able to choose the option which suits them best. Information about all the options is being supplied to customers by the Department of Work and Pensions and the Inland Revenue.

29. Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to ensure that persons with disabilities can make full use of the post office card account. [76449]

Mr. Timms: Benefit and tax credit recipients, including those customers with disabilities, will be offered a range of account options to enable them to receive their money once payment directly into a bank or building society account (including the card account) becomes the normal method of payment from April 2003. The post office card account has no overdraft facilities and is limited to direct payment of benefits, pensions and tax credits by Government agencies only but this limited functionality will attract some individuals because of its simplicity. A second card will also be available for use by a nominee for those customers unable themselves to collect their money at the post office. This facility may be of assistance to some customers who are disabled.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made as to whether the Post Office card account will pass the Government's proposed CAT standard. [76339]

Mr. Timms: The Government have no plans to produce a CAT standard for the Post Office card account. The card account is the only account of its type, quite distinct from current accounts and basic bank accounts. It is a very simple account for benefit, pension and tax credit recipients. Its functionality is limited to the crediting by Government agencies of benefits, pensions and tax credits, and the withdrawal by the customer of those monies at post offices.

Small Businesses

11. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received about business regulation affecting businesses in the North West economic region [76429]

Alan Johnson: I meet regularly with business representative bodies such as the CBI, FSB and BCC to discuss issues, including regulations, that affect them.

The latest OECD report notes that,

Entrepreneurs face a better business and regulatory environment in the UK than in most other OECD countries. The Small Business Service (SBS) supports small and medium-sized companies and encourages an environment that fosters enterprise;

The UK is at the forefront of regulatory reform in the OECD, it has already made major improvements and has planned more. Building on what it has already achieved, the UK now faces challenges as well as opportunities to confirm regulatory reform as a key driver of economic performance.

26. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received concerning the impact of fraud on small businesses, and if she will make a statement. [76446]

Nigel Griffiths: An interdepartmental group has been focusing on credit card fraud and my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition, Consumers and Markets looks forward to receiving their findings.

27. Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to alleviate the burden of regulation on small businesses; and if she will make a statement. [76447]

Nigel Griffiths: Since January 2000, we have put in place a number of measures to reduce the burden of regulations on small businesses, including:

employers with four or fewer employees, exempted from requirement to provide access to stakeholder pensions and deduct pension contributions; increased the statutory audit threshold for companies from £350,000 to £1 million. This will relieve up to 150,000 small firms from the burden of a statutory audit, saving them up to £180 million a year; exempted small shops from the new EU unit pricing requirements; exempted employers with 20 or fewer employees from trade union recognition procedures in the Employment Relations Act. The Small Business Service has also: secured a 12-week period between regulations being agreed and implemented, allowing SMEs time to adapt to new regulations; secured the right to be consulted on all new regulations, so impact on SMEs is not disproportionate. Regulatory Impact Assessments (RIAs) have to be produced for regulations setting out costs and benefits;produced clear guidance on a number of complex regulations; published the Regulatory Reform Action Plan—setting out over 250 proposals for better regulation and reform; regularly brought together groups of SMEs to express their views to officials, e.g. for Patrick Carter's review of payroll administration; set up an independent office to represent the views of small firms to the European institutions.

The Business Link Website is now attracting 80,000 users per month—businesses can register to receive alerts about regulations automatically.Further to these measures: around 900,000 SMEs benefit from measures announced in Budget 2002, including 485,000 businesses whose corporation tax bill is cut or abolished, and 700,000 are benefiting from flat rate VAT scheme; regulatory challenge function within the DTI strengthened. A new team created to consider how we challenge existing and future legislation and to ensure all policy makers fully consider alternatives to regulation at the outset of the policy-making process. The UK is not over-regulated compared to other countries: A survey jointly published by Anderson and GrowthPlus benchmarks the business environment in nine EU countries, plus the USA. In this report the UK comes out in first place, for providing the most entrepreneur-friendly environment scoring consistently high in all measured categories.

The Economist Intelligence Unit (E.I.U.) studied the business environment, including regulation, in 60 countries. Results published in the Economist in August 2001, showed the Netherlands, the USA and Britain in the top three places. Recent OECD report into UK regulation concluded the environment is particularly supportive of market openness and competition. The report noted British entrepreneurs face better business and regulatory conditions than in most other OECD economies, it also highlighted support that SBS gives to SMEs and its role in fostering an enterprise culture in the UK.

Post Offices

14. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the rural post office network. [76432]

17. Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the rural post office network. [76436]

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will announce her proposals for financial support of the rural post offices network; and if she will make a statement. [77866]

Mr. Timms: The Government are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network, and placed a formal requirement on the Post Office in November 2000 to prevent all avoidable closures of rural post offices. We have received advice from Postcomm on the proposals for supporting the rural network from 2003, and details of substantial financial support will be announced shortly.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the rural post office network.

Mr. Timms [holding answer 29 October 2002]: We have received advice from the Postal Services Commission on proposals for supporting the rural network from 2003 and details of substantial financial support will be announced shortly.

The Government has already invested in modernisation comprising some £480 million to computerise the whole post office network. We have made available a £2 million fund to support volunteer and community initiatives to maintain or reopen post office facilities in rural areas where traditional services would otherwise close. Figures for end September 2002 showed that 168 applications–to a value of £825,000–had been assessed and approved and to that date payments of £529,000 had also been made.

The Government is committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices and placed a formal requirement on the Post Office in November 2000 to prevent any avoidable closures of rural post offices.

21. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has on the post office network. [76441]

Mr. Timms: The Department receives representations about the post office network from numerous sources reflecting the valuable role post offices play in their communities. The Government are committed to ensuring that the post office network has a thriving future.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Post Office is to be bound by the Urban Counter Cover Obligation; how this obligation will be assessed, and by whom; and if she will make a statement. [77486]

Mr. Timms: A condition of the offer of funding for Post Office Limited's (POL) urban reinvention programme is that upon completion of the programme, there is a post office branch within a mile of not less than 95 per cent. in aggregate of the urban population of the UK.

If POL fails to comply with this obligation, the Government may vary or withhold funding of the programme. POL's implementation of the programme will be monitored by the DTI.

Manufacturing Industry

15. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the results of her policies for the promotion of the manufacturing industry. 76433

Alan Johnson: We published our manufacturing strategy on 16 May, building on the TUC/CBI work on productivity and the consensus achieved at the manufacturing summit we hosted last December. In partnership with industry and key stakeholders, we have established and identified seven key areas crucial for manufacturing success and driving up productivity. We are taking action in all of these areas to help UK manufacturers fulfil their potential and move up the value chain to high skill, high value operations by promoting investment, skills, innovation and best practice

16. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to encourage a rise in productivity of the manufacturing industry. [76434]

Alan Johnson: The Government's manufacturing strategy was published in May. We have established in partnership with industry and key stakeholders and identified seven key areas crucial for manufacturing success and driving up productivity. We are taking action in all of these areas to help UK manufacturers fulfil their potential and move up the value chain to high skill, high value operations by promoting investment, skills, innovation and best practice.

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made with implementation of the Government's strategy for manufacturing industry. [76435]

Alan Johnson: The Manufacturing Strategy we published on 16 May identified seven key areas of activity for manufacturing success. We have made significant progress in all of these areas to help manufacturers fulfil their potential in the UK. For example, we have:provided additional resources for regional development agencies to help them to engage local industry with innovation, develop key business clusters and sectors, and stimulate workforce development among local employers; opened seven regional centres for manufacturing excellence;increased investment in science and innovation; and boosted promotion of best practice with the expansion of the Partnership Fund and Industry Forum.

Stop Now Orders

18. Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the operation of Stop Now Orders. [76437]

Miss Melanie Johnson: No formal assessment has been made of the operation of the Stop Now Orders Regulations. The Office of Fair Trading in their co-ordination role, monitor the operation of the regulations.

There have been 148 cases thus far with five Stop Now Orders obtained from the courts. The majority of cases have been resolved through negotiation with the trader without having to take court action.

Following discussions with Trading Standards Departments we have made available £2.5 million/year through local authority general allocations to fund Trading Standards' new responsibilities in this area. We have also provided funding as part of the Modernisation Fund for projects that support the implementation and use of the regulations locally and supported training events for Trading Standards.

Energy Supply Market

19. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the situation in the energy supply market. [76439]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan).

Fireworks

22. Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional restrictions are proposed this year on the sale of fireworks. [76442]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 17 October 2002, Official Report, columns 889–90W, announcing a package of measures to address problems caused by fireworks.

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the progress of her review of the legislation governing the sale of fireworks. [74853]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 21October 2002]: I would refer my hon Friend to an answer I gave on the 17 October, Official Report, column 889W announcing a package of measures to address problems caused by fireworks.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to restrict the sale and use of fireworks to (a) certain days of the year and (b) certain times of the day; and if she will make a statement. [76392]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Consumer Protection Act 1987 allows the Government to regulate the safety of fireworks supplied to the public, but not the periods when they are sold. This would require primary legislation. We have recently written to major retailers of fireworks and representative bodies to urge them to adhere to the voluntary sales agreement. This restricts the sales of fireworks to three weeks before November 5 and a few days after and for a similar period around new year. We have received a positive response.

As to usage, I would refer the hon Member to the answer I gave on 17 October 2002, Official Report, columns 889–90W announcing a package of measures to address problems caused by fireworks. DEFRA are seeking to make it easier for local authorities to use the Night Noise Offence within the Noise Act 1996 which targets excessive noise from domestic premises after 11pm and before 7pm.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received on restricting the use of fireworks; and if he will make a statement. [75875]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We have received widespread representations from members of the public and hon. Members calling for restrictions on the use of fireworks.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she has taken to improve quality and safety controls on fireworks; and if he will make a statement. [75876]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I would refer my hon. Friend to an answer I gave on the 17 October 2002, Official Report, column 889W announcing a package of measures to address problems caused by fireworks.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to restrict the sale of fireworks outside the traditional sales period prior to Bonfire Night; and if he will make a statement. [75877]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Consumer Protection Act 1987 allows the Government to regulate the safety of fireworks supplied to the public, but not the period when they are sold. This would require primary legislation. But we have entered into a voluntary agreement with the industry and retail trade whereby fireworks are sold to the public for three weeks before 5 November and for a few days after and for a similar period around New Year.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on Government policy on fireworks. [76430]

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what steps she is taking to improve firework safety. [76431]

Miss Melanie Johnson I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby).

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on (a) the consultation on measures to tackle the misuse of fireworks announced by the Consumer Minister on 1 March and (b) the proposal to enable local authorities to refuse or revoke a licence of a retailer where the licensee is not considered to be a fit person for the sale of fireworks. [77968]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I would refer my hon Friend to the answer I gave on 17 October 2002, Official Report, columns 889–90W, announcing a package of measures to address problems caused by fireworks.

As part of the package of measures, breaches of the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997, could be taken into account in deciding whether a person was fit to hold a licence. Under the proposed manufacture and storage of explosives regulations the power to withhold or revoke a licence applies only to breaches of health and safety legislation.

Renewable Energy

23. Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will discuss with interested parties the possibility of introducing a renewables target for 2020 of 30 per cent. [76443]

Mr. Wilson: I share my hon. Friend's desire to see a very substantial increase in renewable energy generation to help us mitigate the impacts of climate change and to create a more diversified energy market. The aim when setting any target must be to ensure that it is realistic and achievable. Our current target for renewables is that, by 2010, 10 per cent. of electricity sales within Great Britain should come from sources eligible for the recently introduced Renewables Obligation. This will represent a substantial but attainable expansion over the course of the decade.

The Performance and Innovation Unit's report on energy policy which was published last February recommended that the target for the proportion of electricity generated from renewable sources should be increased to 20 per cent. by 2020. In the light of the report the Government are carrying out a review of future energy policy with a view to issuing a White Paper in the new year. The review has included extensive consultation and is including consideration of the possibility of introducing an increased renewables target for 2020.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the discussions between regional development agencies and her Department on the creation of a commercial market for renewable energy and their relative responsibilities. [78483]

Alan Johnson: I recognise the important contribution that regional administrations can make in delivering the Government's demanding targets on renewable energy. Regular discussions are held between the DTI and regional development agencies. These discussions involve Renewables UK, the specialist business unit set up earlier this year to help UK industry to maximise their involvement in renewable energy projects. There has been significant co-operation to date, including the establishment of a fund of £2.5 million allocated to the regional Government Office network to support a range of different activities designed to support the planning and promotion of renewables energy projects and developing targets in regions throughout Britain.

Furthermore, the Government is currently carrying out a review of future energy policy with a view to issuing a White Paper in the New Year. The role of renewables, including the role of regional agencies, will be included in the White Paper.

Textiles Industry

24. Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement about the future of the UK textiles industry. [76444].

Alan Johnson: The UK textiles and clothing industry faces a number of tough challenges to its competitive future. Globalisation has placed increasing pressure on it continually to raise its game to remain competitive and UK manufacturers need to adapt and modernise if they are to respond positively to the pace of change.

The DTI is committed to building a sustainable future for the industry and strongly supports the industry's own Textiles and Clothing Strategy Group which aims to increase its competitiveness through the development of innovative products, more efficient production methods and by diversifying into new markets.

Business Start-ups

25. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the trends in inward investment to the UK since 1997 with special reference to start-up companies and businesses which have since gone bankrupt. [76445]

Alan Johnson: For the financial years 1997–98 to 2000–01, Invest-UK recorded a steady increase year on year of inward investment decisions to invest in the UK from 631 in 1997–98 to 881 in 2000–01. This increase also applied to the number of new projects by either existing foreign owned companies already operating in the UK or by companies locating here for the first time from 192 in 1997–98 to 500 in 2000–01.

There is no requirement on companies to notify Invest-UK of decisions to invest in the UK and so the figures are based only on information volunteered by companies. There are no statistics available which show the number of inward investors which have gone bankrupt.

In 2001–02 there was a drop in project numbers to 827, of which 350 were new projects. This was consistent with the fall in investment levels across the world due to the global economic downturn which critically affected many sectors worldwide. International business confidence was also severely depressed in the aftermath of the 11 September tragedy.

However, figures for 2001 published in September by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) confirm the UK's premier position in Europe. The UK had $496,776 million stock of inward investment, this figure is second only to the US. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, Invest-UK in British Trade International and the development agencies will continue to work hard to ensure that the UK remains the No. 1 location in Europe for inward investment.

Urban Post Offices

28. Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the urban post office network. [76448]

Mr. Timms: Post Office Limited (POL) has just embarked on a programme to restructure the urban post office network. The objective of the programme is to provide modernised and improved facilities which meet customers' needs and expectations and are in the right location for the local community. The programme, supported by the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters, will be taken forward by POL in consultation with individual sub-postmasters, the community, local stakeholders and Postwatch. Parliamentary and European state aids approvals have been received.

31. Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has held with representatives of older people's groups about the proximity of urban sub-post offices to their customers. [76451]

Mr. Timms: Plans of Post Office Limited (POL) to restructure the urban post office network will take careful account of customer needs, including those of older people. POL's restructuring programme will involve extensive consultation with local stakeholders and the community in every case. Public consultation will be carried out under the Code of Practice procedures which have been agreed between POL and Postwatch, the consumer body.

Postwatch will be consulted on individual propositions for change. In addition, on a regular basis, Postwatch meet and consult a range of organisations including those representing older people.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment has been made of the impact the closure of urban post offices will have on the town of Chelmsford, including Broomfield and Great Baddow; and how many post offices in this area are expected to close. [77151]

Mr. Timms: The programme to restructure the urban post office network has only just started and is being taken forward in consultation with individual sub-postmasters, the community, Members of Parliament, other local stakeholders and Postwatch in accordance with the Code of Practice. There is no pre-determined closure list. Under the Code, Post Office Ltd. is required to consult Postwatch and other interested parties on its specific proposals for changes.

The objective of the urban network restructuring programme is to ensure that ad hoc closures which would leave gaps in the network are prevented. It is envisaged that the restructured urban network will provide modernised and improved facilities which meet customers' needs and expectations and are in the right location for the local community.

Aerospace Industry

30. Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures the Government are taking to support the expansion of the aerospace industry. [76450]

Alan Johnson: The Government have been and continue to be supportive of the aerospace industry in the UK. Since 1987 we have committed nearly £1 billion in launch investment for major new large aircraft and engine projects and provided some £20 million per year for civil aerospace research and demonstration. As large investors in R&D, aerospace companies will also benefit from the tax credit scheme for larger firms announced in the last Budget.

We are conscious of the strong competition faced by the industry, however, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 16 May this year the establishment of the Aerospace Innovation and Growth Team, led by Sir Richard Evans. This will enable the key stakeholders to work together to produce a shared vision and strategy for the future success of the industry. Sir Richard and his team are currently about half way through their work and a great deal of effort, from industry, Government and other organisations, is being put into the process. I expect the IGT to report by next spring, with recommendations and an agreed action plan to take the industry forward.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of total turnover exports accounted for in the United Kingdom aerospace industry in the financial years (a) 1998–99; (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01; and if she will make statement. [77900]

Ms Hewitt: The percentage of total turnover accounted for by exports in the UK aerospace industry is shown in the table. Data are sourced from the Society of British Aerospace Companies, but unfortunately, are not available on a financial year basis. Therefore, calendar year figures are supplied:

	Export percentage
1999	60
2000	60
2001	63

Sellafield

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on United Kingdom policy in respect of the court case brought by the Irish Republic at the permanent court of arbitration in The Hague on the non-disclosure of documents relating to the operation of the Sellafield MOX plant. [77238]

Mr. Wilson: The Government of Ireland requested from the United Kingdom Government full versions of two reports about the economic justification of the Sellafield MOX plant prepared by the independent consultants PA Consulting and AD Little. Both reports contain items of commercially confidential information and these were redacted from the versions published by Ministers in 1999 and 2001 as part of the public consultation process. The Government is entitled to protect that information from public disclosure on the grounds that its release would cause unreasonable damage to BNFL's commercial operations and the prospects for its MOX business in particular. Accordingly, the Government has declined Ireland's request.

In accordance with Article 32(1) of the Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North East Atlantic (the 'OSPAR Convention') Ireland requested that an Arbitral Tribunal be established, claiming that the United Kingdom Government was in breach of its obligations under that Convention by declining to provide Ireland with the information requested. Following the appointment of arbitrators and the constitution of the Tribunal, both sides submitted written pleadings prior to an oral hearing held at the Permanent Court of Arbitration (PCA) in The Hague between 21–25 October 2002. The Tribunal will deliver its Award in due course. The written submissions and the transcripts of the oral hearing can be found on the PCA website at www.pca-cpa.org.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which facilities at Sellafield are licensed for the re-dissolution of unirradiated Mox fuel. [77297]

Mr. Wilson: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear site licences are granted in respect of sites rather then individual facilities. Under conditions attached to such site licences, HSE requires that for every operation on site that may affect safety, the licensee shall prepare a safety case to demonstrate that any proposed activity will be safe.

Sellafield currently does not have a safety case for a production facility to re-dissolve unirradiated MoX fuel. However, BNFL is considering various options for reusing the fissile material, including fuel dissolution and fuel pellet crushing into a powder; re-dissolution may involve modifications to existing plant. I understand that in due course BNFL will be submitting proposals to HSE, including any necessary safety case, to gain permission for the proposed activity.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representation she has received concerning the decommissioning of Sellafield in the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement. [77546]

Mr. Wilson: Many representations have been received from hon. Members, their constituents, non-government organisations and foreign states regarding decommissioning of Sellafield in the last ten years.

The question of how to manage the whole of the UK's civil nuclear liabilities more effectively—which includes decommissioning at Sellafield—is the subject of the Government's recent White Paper "Managing the Nuclear Legacy—A Strategy For Action". The White Paper proposes fundamental changes to current management arrangements including the establishment of a new strategic body, the Liabilities Management Authority (LMA). The LMA's task will be to ensure that the nuclear legacy is cleaned up safely, securely, cost effectively, and in ways which protect the environment for current and future generations. The Government intends to ensure that the work of the LMA is carried out in a transparent manner.

Agriculture

Paul Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many letters she received between 1 August and 15 October advocating the inclusion of the Development Box in the Government's negotiations on the WTO Agreement on Agriculture; and if she will make a statement. [77787]

Ms Hewitt: Between 1 August and 15 October 2002, my Department has received 270 letters advocating the inclusion of the Development Box in the Government's negotiations on the WTO Agreement on Agriculture.

Airships

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what work her Department has conducted to evaluate the use of airships as mobile telecommunication platforms. [77063]

Mr. Timms: The Government do not distinguish between different platforms for delivery of competitive mobile telecommunications services. British companies involved in the development of airship technology that could potentially be used for a wide range of applications, including fixed and mobile telecommunications, have received some support.

Biotechnology

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking to ensure that stringent criteria for patenting biotechnology inventions are applied at the European patent office. [77872]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The criteria for patenting in this field are laid down in EU Directive 98/44/EC on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions. The UK was successful in achieving incorporation of these criteria into the implementing regulations of the European Patent Convention, which governs the work of the European Patent Office (EPO), at the end of 2000.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role her Department is playing in international collaboration aimed at harmonising practice on the patenting of biotechnology inventions. [77873]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The G7 countries have agreed to work together on the issues surrounding the patentability of biotechnological inventions. UK guidelines summarising the Patent Office's current practice based on the existing law and legal precedents from the UKcourts and the European Patent Office (EPO) will be provided to the G7 as a basis for further discussion. Staff in the UK Patent Office have also established and maintained regular contacts with their opposite numbers in the EPO to exchange information about practice in this field. Similar contacts exist with the Swedish, Austrian, Japanese, Chinese and Australian Patent Offices. The Patent Office takes due account of decisions which emerge from the EPO in making its own decisions.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines she has issued on the benchmarks used for assessing the patentability of biotechnology inventions; and what implications these guidelines have for future patenting of DNA sequences identified by data-mining techniques. [77874]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Patent Office published the examination guidelines used by patent examiners for assessing the patentability of biotechnological inventions in October. The guidelines are a summary of the Office's current practice based on the existing law and legal precedents from the UK courts and the European Patent Office. They are available from the Patent Office website at http://www.patent.gov.uk

Inventions arising from data-mining have to satisfy the usual patentability requirements, including inventive steps. The guidelines state that the 'use of mining to identify a polynucleotide or a polypeptide homologous to a polynucleotide or polypeptide, having a known function or activity, will not normally involve and inventive step'.

British Energy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received from firms involved in the generation and sale of electricity in the United Kingdom, in response to the funding package put in place to support British Energy; and if she will make a statement. [77479]

Ms Hewitt: My Department has received representations from a number of companies in relation to the Government's financial assistance to British Energy.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact on other electricity generators of the rescue package for British Energy; and if she will make a statement. [77482]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's overriding objectives in providing financial assistance to British Energy are to ensure nuclear safety and security of supply while protecting the interests of taxpayers. My Department is currently considering with the company options for its future. Any assistance to restore viability will have to comply with EU rules, including avoiding undue distortion of competition

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to ensure that the British Energy Trading arrangements work effectively in Scotland; and if she will make a statement. [77481]

Ms Hewitt: The creation of a wholesale electricity market for GB, as set out in the BETTA (British Electricity Trading and Transmission Arrangements) proposals will mean that the current barriers that independent Scottish generators, along with British Energy, face in selling to the England and Wales market will be removed.

The Nuclear Energy Agreement (NEA), which was put in place at the time of privatisation, ensures that British Energy has buyers for its generation output. The terms of the NEA have recently been renegotiated and are subject to final approval by Ofgem, who have indicated that they are 'minded to ' approve the new terms. Under the new terms the NEA will cease to exist on the 1 April 2006 or on the advent of BETTA, whichever is the sooner.

Government announced in April 2002 that it intended to bring forward legislation to implement BETTA when parliamentary time allowed. Detailed consultations on the new arrangements to create a GB market are already underway and will be ongoing over the coming months.

Broadband Technology (Aberdeenshire)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government is taking to promote broadband technology in Aberdeenshire. [76651]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The Scottish Executive is implementing its broadband strategy "Connecting Scotland: Our broadband future" and will shortly be publishing an update to that strategy outlining progress to date.

One strand of the strategy is to identify the need for direct support measures and this has been taken forward through the £4.4 million Scottish programme of projects under the UK Broadband Fund. There are measures to stimulate awareness and demand for broadband via a broadband information website and a network of local demonstration centres for SMEs. On the supply side, there are technology trials in rural areas, such as Powerline Carrier and Wireless pilots, which aim to determine the potential of these technologies for delivering broadband in rural communities.

In addition, the DTI is establishing a network of broadband experts to be located in each of the English regions and the devolved Administrations, to spread best practice in the promotion and take-up of broadband technology.

All of these measures will help stimulate the rollout and take-up of broadband technologies throughout Scotland, including in Aberdeenshire.

Cable Networks

Jim Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on progress in completing the non-BT cable network, as set out in the terms of the Telecommunications Act 1984. [77348]

Mr. Timms: Cable networks currently pass approximately 50 per cent. of UK households. Decisions on whether to extend coverage further are a commercial matter for the cable company concerned, as network expansion is no longer dictated by the build milestones in a cable operator's Telecommunications Act licence. Cable franchises, when originally granted, contained a balance of exclusivity and build milestones. Since 1998, the exclusivity of the franchises has been progressively removed to enable greater competition in the provision of communications services. This process was completed on 1 January 2001. In recognition of this, cable operators' licences are no longer subject to build milestones.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further action she plans to take to ensure the target of 10GWe of CHP by 2010 is achieved; and if she will make a statement. [78140]

Mr. Wilson: The draft CHP strategy reiterated the Government's commitment to a target of at least 10GWe of Good Quality CHP capacity by 2010. Responses to the consultation on the CHP strategy will feed into consideration of the Energy White Paper. A summary of the responses to the consultation will be placed on the DEFRA website shortly.

Commercial Kiosk Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much funding the Government will provide for the Commercial Kiosk Service; and if she will make a statement. [77477]

Mr. Timms: The commercial kiosk pilot due to start early next spring will be a commercially funded undertaking. It will not receive financial support from Government. However Government expects to participate by making UK online interactive available on the kiosks.

Communication and Information Industries

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of UK GDP the communication and information industries represent; and if she will make a statement. [77906]

Mr. Timms: The communication and information industries represented about 9 per cent. of total UK Gross Value Added at basic prices in 2000. The estimate has been derived from the ONS Input-Output Analyses and the ONS Annual Business Inquiry.

Community Development Venture Capital Fund

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which private companies are involved in administration of the Community Development Venture Capital Fund in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland. [78147]

Nigel Griffiths: Bridges Community Ventures Ltd. administers the Community Development Venture Fund.

Credit Licences

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if she will list the occasions on which credit licences issued by the Office of Fair Trading under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 were (a) approved, (b) revoked and (c) refused within Scotland, broken down by area; [76541]

(2) how many credit licences were (a) revoked and (b) refused in each of the last five years. [76542]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 23 October 2002]: Information on refusals and revocations of consumer credit licences is available only at national level. The figures for the UK for the last five years are:

	Licences revoked	Licence applications refused
1997	34	18
1998	15	18
1999	25	27
2000	31	35
2001	21	26
2002 to date	14	25

The number of licences issued to applicants based in Scotland since 18 October 1997 is:

	Licences issued
1997	272
1998	1,569
1999	1,312
2000	1,067
2001	1,015
2002 to 30 September	754

Energy Supply

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with Ofgem about guaranteeing long-term security of energy supply; and if she will make a statement. [77483]

Ms Hewitt: My Department is in regular contact with Ofgem to discuss energy security issues. The Joint Energy Security of Supply working group (JESS), chaired jointly by DTI and Ofgem, is the main forum for jointly monitoring security of supply issues over a medium-term timescale of up to seven years. The first JESS report, containing security indicators, was issued in June 2002 and a copy was placed in the House of Commons Library. Long-term energy security to 2020 and beyond is a key subject for the forthcoming Energy White Paper, due to be published in the new year. Ofgem are involved in the inter-departmental steering group, which is developing the White Paper.

EU Copyright Directive

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the likely effects of the EU Copyright Directive in terms of (a) the ownership of intellectual property and (b) access to information. [76957]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The EU Copyright Directive does not require us to make any changes that will affect the ownership of intellectual property. Moreover, copyright does not protect information as such. Where information is contained in a copyright protected work, then implementation of the Directive in the UK will not make any change of substance to the copyright owner's existing right to control if and how that work is made available to the public by any means.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received regarding the implementation of the EU Copyright Directive (2001/298/EC) (2); and if she will make a statement. [76956]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The consultation on implementation of the EU Copyright Directive has a closing date of 31 October. We will be considering all responses very carefully as we take forward work on implementation.

Export Control Organisation

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) target and (b) actual time to complete licence assessments by the Export Control Organisation is for (i) applications where other Government Departments are consulted and (ii) applications not circulated to other Government Departments; and if she will make a statement. [78288]

Nigel Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) on 6 March 2002, Official Report, column 399W. In almost all cases it is necessary for a Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) application to be circulated to other Government Departments for advice.

Export Credit Guarantees (Gulf States)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the annual value is of export credit guarantees issued to (a) Qatar, (b) Bahrain, (c) the United Arab Emirates, and (d) Oman since 1995; how many guarantees were issued in each year; what percentage of guarantee value each year was in each export sector; and if she will list each project of more than £10 million supported by those guarantees. [77377]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 28 October 2002]: The following table lists the ECGD maximum liability for all guarantees issued since 1995 for the specified markets. It also lists the number of such guarantees, the percentage of maximum liability under the civil, civil aerospace and defence sectors and a broad description of the projects for guarantees issued over £10 million.

Export Publications Catalogue

Dr Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many titles are featured in the Export Publications Catalogue; what the website address is for the catalogue; what the running costs were for financial years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000 and (d) 2000–01; and if she will make a statement. [78114]

Ms Hewitt: The Export Publications Catalogue is no longer published. Since May 2000, business sector and export market information content previously published as priced books listed in the Catalogue has been made freely available on www.tradepartners.gov.uk

The specific running costs for the Export Publications Catalogue were not separately recorded. However, based on the staff and accommodation costs the totaladministration running costs for maintaining the Catalogue are estimated as:

1997–98	37,983.00
1998–99	37,860.00
1999–2000	38,713.00

The Unit was wound-up at the end of the Financial Year 1999–2000 and staff were redeployed on preparing information for the new Trade Partners UK website.

Financial Assistance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial assistance has been given in each of the last five years to (a) the British Printing Industries Federation, (b) the Booksellers Association, (c) London Fashion Week, (d) the Designer Fact File and (e) the Education Pack for Schools in the Clothing and Textile industries; what assistance is planned for the next three years; and if she will make a statement. [78261]

Mr. Timms: DTI does not provide direct financial assistance to the British Printing Industries Federation or the Booksellers Association but has worked with these organisations in partnership with other industry members to support initiatives aimed at raising their sectors' competitiveness and productivity.

My Department has contributed support towards the above initiatives as follows:

London Fashion Week:

1997–2000—£120,000 per annum

2001—£170,000

2002—£214,000

Designer Fact File:

1997—£22,000

Education Packs for Clothing and Textiles:

April 2001 to April 2003—£161,500

This support relates to specific industry-led initiatives aiming at supporting the UK textiles and clothing sector. The focus for this assistance is the priorities identified by the industry itself, contained in the Textiles and Clothing Strategy Group's report: 'A National Strategy for the UK Textiles and Clothing Industry', published in June 2000. DTI will continue to work with the TCSG to support this industry but the level of future support depends on it coming forward with appropriate initiatives to help raise its competitiveness and viability.

Firefighters' Strike

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what preparations she has made to ensure the safety and continuity of service to the public in the event of a firefighters' strike; and what the cost is to the Department of these actions. [77662]

Ms Hewitt: My Department is already following the fire safety guidance recently published on the the website of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. My Department is taking the opportunity to remind its staff and contractors of good fire safety practices and what to do in an emergency. My Department does not expect to incur any increase in costs.

Focus Group Research

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what use she and her Department have made of focus group research since June 2001; if she will identify for each research project the topics covered, the person or organisation carrying out the research, and the total cost; and if she will publish the research on her Department's website. [74989]

Ms Hewitt: The Department does not collect centrally the information sought, and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Foresight Vehicle LINK Programme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was invested by the Government, broken down by financial years, in the Foresight Vehicle LINK programme; whether the programme is still live; what assessment of the programme has taken place and at what cost; and if she will make a statement. [77902]

Ms Hewitt: The Foresight Vehicle LINK programme is still open. Foresight Vehicle has just published a technology road map identifying critical technology and research themes and this, taken together with the recommendations of the Automotive Innovation andGrowth Team, will be used as the basis for future calls for proposals. Sponsor departments will be meeting in the next few weeks to discuss the timing of the next call. It is too early for a full formal evaluation of the research to date, but on completion, individual projects are assessed against their objectives by the Programme Management Panel. In addition, themed dissemination events are held regularly and papers have been presented at international conferences. Details of the research portfolio and progress are also made available on the Foresight Vehicle website www.foresightvehicle.org.uk

Government commitment is as follows (these figures include the EPSRC Innovative Manufacturing Initiative Road Transport Programme which has been subsumed into Foresight Vehicle):

Financial Years (£k)	DfT	DTI	Highways Agency	MoD	EPSRC	Total

Gas Suppliers

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what measures are being taken to ensure that gas suppliers are complying with Ofgem and Energywatch's Erroneous Transfer Customer Charter; and what enforcement powers are given to Ofgem to impose the Charter's provisions on fraudulent and negligent firms; [75941]

(2) what measures are being taken to ensure that gas suppliers are complying with Ofgem and Energywatch's Erroneous Transfer Customer Charter; and what enforcement powers are given to Ofgem to impose the Charter's provisions on fraudulent and negligent firms who do not correct an erroneous transfer within the designated time period as stipulated by the Charter. [75942]

Mr. Wilson: This is a matter for the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem). I understand that the Chief Executive of Ofgem will write to the hon. Member on the issues he has raised.

Industry Forum

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) financial and (b) other support was provided to the Industry Forum in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01; what budget there is for 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [78263]

Ms Hewitt: The Industry Forum Adaptation initiative was supported by a budget of £15 million between 1998 and 2001. Due to the high demand and its growing impact on productivity across a range of sectors, a further budget of £9 million was announced at the Manufacturing Summit in December 2001. This covers FY 2002–03 and 2003–04 and strengthens the overall level of support for best practice activities. An additional £9 million was also announced to include joint activity with the Partnership Fund to integrate people and process development.

In addition, the Industry Forum Network was established in December 2000 through the Fit for the Future National Best Practice Campaign, which my Department co-funds. The network is made up of CEOs of each industry forum and facilitates cross-working and the exchange of operational experiences.

Iran

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to encourage the development of the Iranian oil and gas industry; and what steps she is taking to encourge UK firms to invest in Iran. [78305]

Mr. Wilson: Her Majesty's Government has supported UK companies investing in the development of the Iranian oil and gas industry and will continue to do so.

Trade Partners UK, including the commercial team at the Embassy in Tehran, offers a strong package of support for British companies wishing to do business with Iran. In addition to providing up to date information on market conditions, they support a programme of trade missions to the market, help British groups attend key trade fairs, organise inward missions and provide targeted assistance to UK companies in key sectors.

Iraq (Exports)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what British exports of material and technology capable of being used in biological weapons production were made to Iraq since 1972; and how many export licences were (a) granted and (b) rejected in respect of such material and technology over this period. [75867]

Nigel Griffiths: The Department of Trade and Industry's Export Control Organisation records details of all relevant export licences granted and rejected. Since 2 May 1997 these are published in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001 annual reports are available in the Libraries of the House.

Previous administrations have not considered it appropriate to publish information on individual licensing decisions. Information on export licences granted and rejected since 1972, where the end users were in Iraq, is not held centrally and a manual search of all the case files would incur disproportionate costs.

The Government are well aware of the special risks that exist in relation to weapons of mass destruction (WMD), and for this reason gives extremely careful scrutiny to applications that involve potential WMD concerns. A very wide range of items with otherwise entirely legitimate applications can have a potential use in connection with WMD. The Government will not issue an export licence where there is an unacceptable risk of diversion to a WMD programme of concern.

Israel

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her Department's policy is regarding the export of arms to Israel. [77054]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

All relevant export licence applications are rigorously assessed on a case by case basis against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria, taking account of the circumstances prevailing at the time and other announced Government policies. Our criteria clearly set out our commitment to take account of the risk that exports might be used for internal repression or external aggression. The outbreak of the intifada, continued Israeli incursions in the Occupied Territories and the Israeli breach of its assurance that UK originated equipment would not be used in the Occupied Territories have all been factored in to the Government's current export licensing policy. The UK arms trade with Israel is tiny.

Job Losses

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her Department's policy to collect statistics on the number of jobs lost from the UK to other countries. [76396]

Ms Hewitt: There are significant practical and conceptual difficulties in measuring the process of job creation and job destruction and attributing cause and effect. At this stage, we have no plans to collect figures in this area. However, my Department will continue to monitor where possible, the location and relocation decisions of UK and foreign companies as part of our ongoing programme of work on productivity and competitiveness.

Liabilities Management Authority

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether (a) restrictions and (b) exclusions will apply to the nationality of the licensees contracted by the Liabilities Management Authority to manage (i) individual and (ii) multiple sites. [77296]

Ms Hewitt: UK and overseas companies will be able to bid for contracts, reflecting the Government's determination to draw on the best available skills in managing and disposing of nuclear waste. However, contracts will only be awarded to companies satisfying regulatory and security requirements relevant to the site or sites concerned.

NPower

Mr. David Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many complaints she has received about the operation of npower. [77856]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 October 2002]: I have received a number of representations about npower and other gas and electricity suppliers. Statutory responsibility for investigating complaints from consumers who have been unable to obtain a satisfactory response from their supplier lies with the Gas and Electricity Consumer Council (Energywatch). Energywatch publishes complaints statistics on website at www.energywatch@org.uk The Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (OFGEM) monitors the sales activities of energy suppliers, and may take investigative and enforcement action against any supplier that breaches the terms of its supply licence.

Parcelforce

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received from businesses and individuals about the services operated by Parcelforce; and if she will make a statement. [77478]

Mr. Timms: Services operated by Parcelforce are an operational matter for the company. Recent representations I have received on behalf of businesses concerning these matters have therefore been passed on to Consignia plc for attention. I answered an adjournment debate yesterday on a representation raised with me by the hon. Member for Guildford (Sue Doughty).

Redundant Building Grant Scheme

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been (a) applied for and (b) spent through the Redundant Building Grant Scheme in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03 to date, broken down by county. [78388]

Alun Michael: I have been asked to reply.

Following the introduction of the Regional Development Agencies' single budget arrangements last April they are no longer obliged to operate former Rural Development Programme schemes such as the Redundant Building Grant. The Department has not collected this information since 2000–01, when expenditure was estimated at approximately £2.8m. Figures for individual counties have never been collected centrally.

RICD Fund

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been (a) applied for and (b) spent through the Regional Innovation and Competitiveness Development fund by rural local authorities in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03 to date. [78402]

Alan Johnson: In 2000–01 the Competitiveness Development Fund (CDF) provided a funding stream from the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) to the nine English Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) to spend on priorities they identified for increasing competitiveness in their regions. The RDAs were allocated CDF of £9.7 million in 2000–01.

In 2001–02, the CDF was subsumed within the department's Regional Innovation Fund (RIF), which ran for one financial year before itself being subsumed within the 'Single Pot' financial arrangements applying to RDAs from 2002–03. The RIF similarly provided a funding stream to the RDAs, which was designed to enable them to support regional competitiveness, innovation and enterprise, and to support cluster development and business incubation in their regions. £54.1 million of RIF funding was allocated by DTI to the RDAs for this purpose.

The RDAs' use of Government funding is described in their audited annual reports and accounts. These are laid before Parliament each year before the summer recess

Sensors Technology

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial assistance has been given to the sensors technology, through the LINK sensors for industrial applications programme in each of the last five years; what support is planned in the next two years; when the programme is next due to report; what assessment has taken place of the effectiveness of the programme; whether the programme has a website; and if she will make a statement. [78264]

Ms Hewitt: Financial support under the LINK Sensors and Sensor Systems for Industrial Applications Programme for the last five years was as follows:

Year	Spend £k
1997–98	244
1998–99	727
1999–2000	1,187
2000–01	1,343
2001–02	1,237

Predicted spend for 2002–03 and 2003–04 is £1,300k and £1,000k respectively. Further support for sensors technology will be available under the new LINK Basic Technologies for Industrial Applications Programme, which was announced by my noble Friend, the Minister for Science and Innovation on 26 July 2002.

The next progress report to the LINK Directorate on the Programme is due in October 2003. Progress on the programme and individual projects is monitored continuously, but it is too early to carry out a full evaluation of the effectiveness of the programme as only a few projects have been completed and are now moving towards commercial exploitation. However, the research has already given rise to 80 refereed scientific papers and 12 patent applications. Two seminars have been held at which progress on projects has been reported. The programme website address is: www.dti.gov.uk/sensors. I have no plans to make a statement about this programme.

Smart South West

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the UK Online for Business strategy is and the role played by Smart South West in promoting it; and if she will make a statement on the nature of Smart South West's relationship with business in the region. [74935]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 22 October 2002]: The aim of UK online for business is to help make the UK the best place in the world for e-business, with an extensive and competitive broadband market judged using international comparative measures of business uptake and use of information and communication technology (ICT). This will be achieved by assisting companies, through the provision of advice, tools and content, to achieve greater productivity and competitiveness through the deeper, more integrated use of ICT.

As part of the programme, a UK online for business champion has been appointed for each region and Devolved Administration. The champions work with the RDAs, Business Link Organisations and other regional bodies, helping to facilitate activity that will contribute to the achievement of the targets. The champion for the South West is Colin Bluck, who although Executive Director of Smart South West, performs the role of champion in an individual capacity. Smart South West as an organization is one of over 400 partners with whom we seek to work to promote the use of ICT to business.

I am not in a position to comment on the nature of Smart South West's relationship with business in the region.

Steel Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support and assistance she will provide to the UK steel industry in response to the introduction of US tariffs. [69480]

Ms Hewitt: The Government supported the European Commission's robust response in pursuing WTO action and took the lead in pressing for EU safeguard action to protect the UK and EU steel industry against diversion of trade. The Government have also actively supported UK companies in their efforts to secure product exclusions from the US measures and will continue to do so. To date, 70 per cent. of UK steel exports are not covered by the US tariff increases.

The Government can only provide support to the steel sector within the strict aid criteria rules that apply to the sector. We continue to provide financial support to the sector representatives for initiatives designed to improve competitiveness.

Wind Turbines

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact decommissioning nuclear sources will have on the number of wind turbines which will be needed in the British Isles. [77862]

Mr Wilson: Energy security and taking action on climate change are key issues for the Energy White Paper which will be published in the new year. The role of nuclear and renewables, including wind power, will be included in the White Paper. The policies and measures in the Government's climate change programme should deliver our Kyoto commitment even with the current planned closure programme for the nuclear stations between now and 2010.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of the number of wind turbines which will be needed in the British Isles to meet the Kyoto commitments on sustainable energy. [77863]

Mr. Wilson: The policies and measures in the Government's climate change programme should deliver our Kyoto emissions commitment. The climate change programme includes policies and measures impacting on all sectors of the economy and society, which seek to reduce emissions attributable both to the production of energy, and to its consumption.

Measures to reduce emissions attributable to energy production include the Renewables Obligation, which places an obligation on electricity suppliers to source a rising proportion of their total sales from eligible renewable sources. Our target is that 10 per cent. of licensed electricity supplies will be generated from eligible renewable sources by 2010. Wind power will make an important contribution to this target, as will other renewable sources of electricity. Achieving this target could result in an estimated saving of around 2.5 million tonnes of carbon emissions by 2010.

This expansion of renewable energy is however just one part of the Government's wider climate change programme. Other initiatives include for example the climate change levy on conventional fuels and the UK emissions trading scheme which affect the business sector. In the domestic sector, the new Energy Efficiency Commitment places new obligations on gas and electricity suppliers to make energy efficiency improvements; there are also new requirements on local authorities to make proposals to achieve energy efficiency gains; and the £600 million home energy efficiency scheme provides grants for home insulation and heating improvements to improve energy savings. On transport, there is the EU-level agreements with the car manufacturers to improve fuel efficiency in new cars, backed by changes in UK vehicle taxation through company car tax and vehicle excise duty, together with the infrastructure investment in the 10-year plan to tackle congestion and pollution.

As my hon. Friend may know, energy efficiency was one of the key areas highlighted in the PIU review of energy policy. The Government support an increasing role for energy efficiency and is formulating a response to be published in the White Paper around the turn of the year. The role of renewables will also be included in the White Paper.

TRANSPORT

Air Travel in 2030

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 October 2002, Official Report, columns 157–58W, on air passengers, if he will estimate the forecast for air travel in 2030 based on a 1 per cent. per annum increase in air fares in real terms over the forecasting period. [78547]

Mr. Jamieson: The forecasts of air traffic demand for 2030, published in "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East", assumed a 1 per cent. per annum reduction in air fares in real fares. The resulting forecasts of unconstrained passenger demand for 2030 were 501 million passengers nationally and 301 million passengers in the south-east.

Central Railway Project

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Central Railway project. [78461]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 23 October 2002, Official Report, column 304W to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan).

Headlight Glare

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the effect of the planting of foliage on the central reservations of UK motorways on reducing headlight glare from other carriageways. [78353]

Mr. Jamieson: Planting and maintenance of foliage in the central reserve creates safety risks to road workers, and can cause congestion for travellers, without offering any additional safety benefits. On this basis, planting foliage in the central reservations of motorways is not favoured except where the central reservation is very wide. Headlight glare is very rarely a factor in motorway accidents.

Motorised Wheelchairs

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it compulsory for users of motorised wheelchairs to hold third party liability insurance. [78618]

Mr. Jamieson: Insurance for users of motorised wheelchairs and scooters is currently not compulsory but is strongly recommended. We are planning to review the legal framework governing both the construction and use of such vehicles in the near future and the issue of whether insurance should be compulsory will be among those on which we will be seeking views.

Rail Passenger Partnership

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has made available for the Rail Passenger Partnership since 2000; and how much was spent in rural areas in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 to date. [78397]

Mr. Jamieson: The Rail Passenger Partnership (RPP) scheme was launched in 1999 with a budget of £105 million over three years. In December 2001 the Strategic Rail Authority re-launched RPP with a budget of £400 million until 2010–11.

It is not possible to give a precise figure for the amount spent exclusively in rural areas, as many of the schemes for which funding has been awarded by the SRA are of benefit to rural and non-rural areas. In the financial year 2000–01, some £271,000 was awarded for schemes containing a rural element. In 2001–02 the figure was just under £1.1 million. The projected figure for 2002–03 is some £2.3 million.

Rail Services

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish figures for the punctuality and reliability of rail services operated by (a) Central trains and (b) Wales and Borders trains through Telford Central station over the last 12 months. [78348]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority publish performance statistics for all train operating companies in their six monthly "On Track" publication. The figures for each operator are not broken down to route level, but reflect the performance of their services in aggregate. The most recent edition was published on 6 June. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

Self-loading Lorries

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the maximum (a) length and (b) load is of lorries with on-board, self-loading crane equipment under the Construction and Use Regulations. [78817]

Mr. Jamieson: The maximum overall length of a lorry or combination of lorry and trailer is set out in the table. Where a self-loading crane is fitted, it is exempt from the calculation of overall length if attached at the rear of the lorry or at the rear of the combination of lorry and trailer. In all other cases it is included in the calculation of overall length.

The maximum gross weight that these vehicles may operate at is set out in the table. The limits are contained in the Road Vehicles (Authorised Weight) Regulations 1998 and are dependent on the vehicles type and configuration.

Vehicle type	Maximum overall length (metres)	Maximum weight (tonnes)
2 axle rigid	12	18
3 axle rigid	12	25/[1] 26
4 axle rigid	12	30/[1] 32
3 axle articulated	16.5	26
4 axle articulated	16.5	[1] 38
5 axle articulated	16.5	40
6 axle articulated	16.5	[1] 44
3 axle road train (rigid vehicle towing a draw bar trailer)	18.75	26
4 axle road train	18.75	26
5 axle road train	18.75	[1] 40
6 axle road train	18.75	[1] 44

[1] Subject to certain suspension/tyre/axle load requirements being met.

TREASURY

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many PFI and PPP schemes have been (a) completed and (b) signed in (i) each of the regions of England, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales, broken down by department. [75854]

Mr. Boateng: A region-by-region breakdown of the number and total capital value of English PFI and PPP projects, both signed and completed, will be published in a series of forthcoming Treasury publications, entitled"Public Private Partnerships: helping to deliver public services". One such booklet is being prepared for each English region. The booklets will be published by 30 November 2002, and copies will be deposited in the House of Commons Library.

The number and capital value of both signed and completed Scottish PFI projects, along with a departmental breakdown, is published by the Scottish Executive on their website. (The number of projects signed and completed is listed at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/pfi/facts-01 .asp, while a department-by-departmentlist is available at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/pfi/projectjist.xls.)

A list of Welsh PFI and PPP projects, both completed deals and deals in procurement, including capital values, is published by the National Assembly for Wales on their website. (This can be found at http://www.pfu.wales.gov.uk/scripts/pfilist.asp.)

Departmental Job Vacancies

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many non-devolved posts were advertised in the press in each year since June 1999; and what percentage of them were advertised in the Scottish press. [76854]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 24 October 2002]: The information for HM Treasury is as follows:

Information on the number of posts advertised in 1999 is unavailable. Between January 2000 and October 2002, a total of 296 "non-devolved" posts were advertised by HM Treasury in the national press and specialist publications where appropriate. Since 2001 adverts have also been placed on the HM Treasury website. None of the posts were advertised in the Scottish press.

Number of posts advertised by the Treasury in the national press each year since January 2000

Year	Number

January-December 2001	159
January-October 2002	66

Economic Cycle

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the duration of the current economic cycle. [77886]

Ruth Kelly: Budget 2002 (HC 592) included an assessment of cyclical developments, in particular on pages 26 and 190–93.

EU Budget

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate EU member states' contributions to the EU budget in terms of (a) net contributions and (b) per capita contributions since the United Kingdom joined the EU. [77651]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested, for the period 1976 to 2001, is set out in the tables, copies of which will be placed in the Library. These tables are shown in million euro (net contributions) and euro (net contributions per capita). Information on member states net positions for the period 1973 to 1975 is not available.

EU Structural and Cohesion Funds

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the annual UK receipts from European Community Structural and Cohesion Funds from 1995 and the projected receipts for 2003 and 2004. [77650]

Ruth Kelly: Details of UK receipts from Structural Operations for the period 1995–96 to 2001–02 are set out in the table.

1995–96	1.136
1996–97	1.392
1997–98	1.558
1998–99	0.912

2000–01	1.444
2001–02	0.664

Latest forecasts of receipts from Structural Operations for the period 2002–03 to 2004–05 are as follows.

Year	£ billion
2002–03	1.3
2003–04	1.7
2004–05	1.5

Health Care Charges

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of health care systems funded by charges and private medical insurance; and if he will make a statement. [78071]

Mr. Boateng: Detailed information on alternative systems for financing health care was published as part of the results of the review carried out by Derek Wanless on long term trends affecting the health service in the UK.

In presenting this year's budget to Parliament, the Chancellor set out the Government's view that "the NHS system of funding is not just the most equitable but that a reformed NHS, by offering the most comprehensive insurance policy to meet the rising costs from medical advances, can give British people the greater security they need".

Income Tax Revenue

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total income tax revenue was in each year since 1997. [78837]

Dawn Primarolo: The latest figures are contained in Table 1.2 on Inland Revenue's website www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/tax—receipts/menu.htm

Pensions

Mr. Nigel Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proportion of people reaching retirement age in each of the last 10 years had private self-employed pensions; [77887]

(2) how many holders of private pension funds have taken tax-free lump sums in each of the last 10 years; [77888]

(3) how many people contributed to private self-employed pension funds in each of the last 10 years. [77890]

Ruth Kelly: Available information that can be provided without disproportionate cost is in the table.

Year	Number of self-employed contributors to private pension funds (000)[1]
1996–97	1,620
1997–98	1,630
1998–99	1,560
1999–2000	1,560
2000–01	1,480

[1] Estimates are based on the surveys of personal incomes 1996–97 to 2000–01 and include contributors to both Personal Pensions and Retirement Annuity Contracts.

Performance Targets

Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what source data was used to support the statistic cited in his Department's 2002 departmental report that 87 per cent. of main departments' performance targets had been met or partially met by 2002. [78139]

Mr. Boateng: The figure was based on departments' assessments of their performance against their targets, as published in departmental reports.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what protections exist under the FSA review of personal pension sales in circumstances where a financial loss was recompensed through augmentation of an investor's policy and that policy has subsequently had (a) a market value adjustment reduction applied and (b) a transfer or exit penalty applied. [77882]

Ruth Kelly: The aim of the pensions review is to provide adequate compensation (where it is due) to investors, at the time of the review. In this respect, the pensions review seeks to replicate the approach a court of law would take to working out compensation when dealing with a claim for damages.

If a firm has provided adequate compensation to an investor, in accordance with the regulatory requirements, any subsequent gains or losses that occur fall outside the scope of the review as the firm would have fulfilled its obligations under the review.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance and regulations the Financial Services Authority has issued to personal pension providers under the FSA review of personal pension sales in circumstances where a guarantee of a future calculation of possible financial loss has been favoured over immediate financial recompense being made to a policyholder, with respect to (a) calculation and payment of transfer values in respect of a guaranteed policy and (b) reflection of such guaranteed liabilities by personal pension providers for (i) accounting, (ii) financial statement and (iii) regulatory purposes. [77883]

Ruth Kelly: A benefit guarantee is a guarantee by a life office to an investor to mirror or provide benefits of equivalent value to those that the investor would have had in the occupational scheme, which he opted out of or failed to join. Benefits become payable when an investor dies, retires, or transfers the pension to another company.

In respect of (a), investors who wish to transfer their policy away from the firm must be provided with a full transfer value quotation, which fairly reflects the presence of the guarantee.

In respect of (b), (i) and (ii), there is no guidance which requires firms to reflect their guarantee liabilities separately in their accounts or financial statements. Instead, when reporting their entire pensions review provisions firms will include their guarantee liabilities. In respect of (b) (iii), a firm must give an undertaking to the FSA that its reserving basis for the guarantee is adequate, does not compromise its solvency position and will conform with the requirements of its prudential regulator. The Government Actuary issued guidance to appointed actuaries on the reserving implications of guaranteeing pension benefits linked to individual salaries. This guidance is incorporated within Volume Three of the IPRU (INS) rulebook under the heading DAA9.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask Mr Chancellor of the Exchequer what his assessment is of the aggregate liability of public funds for PFI schemes concluded in each year since 1997. [78294]

Mr. Boateng: Detailed figures setting out estimates of future payments to be made under PFI contracts are published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report each year. Table C19 of Budget 2002 includes the latest projections of estimated payments for services provided under the Private Finance Initiative for the years 2002–03 to 2027–28.

In line with past practice, I expect to update these figures shortly.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his assessment is of the capital value of PFI schemes concluded in each year since 1997. [78295]

Mr. Boateng: Estimates of capital investment by the private sector in support of PFI projects (both signed and those at preferred bidder) are published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report each year. Tables C17 and C18 of Budget 2002 include the latest projections of capital expenditure by the private sector under the private finance initiative, broken down by department, for 2002–03 to 2004–05. In line with past practice, I expect to update these figures shortly.

Savings Gateway and Baby Bond

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultation has taken place regarding the introduction of a (a) baby bond and (b) savings gateway; and if he will make a statement. [78092]

Ruth Kelly: Proposals for the Child Trust Fund and Saving Gateway were launched in April 2001 in the consultation document entitled "Saving and Assets for All". A follow up consultation document entitled "Delivering Saving and Assets" was published in November 2001. "Delivering Saving and Assets" reported back on the responses received in the first round of consultation, announced proposals to launch pilots for the Saving Gateway and raised more detailed questions on the delivery model for the Child Trust Fund.

The "Delivering Saving and Assets" consultation ended on 28 February 2002. Pilots for the Saving Gateway were launched in August 2002. A statement on the development of the Child Trust Fund and Saving Gateway proposals will be included in the pre-Budget report.

Small Business (Insurance Premium Costs)

Mr. Salmond: To ask Mr Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to alleviate the effect on small businesses of increases in insurance premium costs since 11 September 2001; if he will estimate the impact of Government policy on increasing insurance costs on small businesses. [78211]

Ruth Kelly: The Government is aware of the recent rise in insurance premiums and the particular problems faced by some small businesses. The Government is working with trade associations, the insurance industry and organisations such as the Federation of Small Businesses, to try and maximize the availability of affordable liability insurance cover.

Split Capital Trusts

Mr. Love: To ask Mr Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations have taken place with the Financial Services Authority regarding concerns over misselling of split capital trusts; and if he will make a statement. [78086]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury is in regular contact with the FSA on a wide range of issues.

Tax Receipts

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the (a) level of tax receipts and (b) estimate made at the time of the budget for (i) income tax, (ii) stamp duty, (iii) corporation tax and (iv) capital gains tax. [78178]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 October 2002]: The Budget estimates of net tax receipts are shown in Table C7 on page 217 of the April 2002 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Tax Revenue

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his Department's projected income from (a) tax revenue and (b) corporation tax revenue is for (i) the financial year 2002–03 and (ii) each of the next three financial years. [78835]

Mr. Boateng: Consistent with the Code for Fiscal Stability, an interim update of projections for tax receipts will be published in the forthcoming pre-Budget Report.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 391

SESSION 2001–02

21st October—31st October 2002

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).
